

Peter Kelley/Bullet

Wood Is Burning: Men's basketball coach Rod Wood fumes during his team's 50-46 loss to Catholic University last night. Full story, see page 12.

Associate Professor Of Sociology Dies Monday At Age 64

By COREY BYERS
News Editor

William Byrd Hanson, associate professor of sociology and past chair of the sociology and anthropology department, died on Monday, Jan. 31 after suffering from a rare lung disease, idiopathic pulmonary fibrosis.

Hanson, who was 64, taught from 1981 until the spring of 2004. Hanson began working at the University of Mary Washington full-time in 1981 and worked part-time in 1996 after undergoing a lung transplant surgery. He is survived by his wife Roxane and their two adult children, son Jesse, and daughter Megan. His family was by his side when he passed away early Monday morning.

Before he came to UMW, Hanson was an associate professor at California State University at Bakersfield and an assistant professor at Providence College. He received his doctoral degree in medical sociology from Brown University.

Hanson taught several sociology courses "at" the university, including Civil Rights in the New Millennium, Urban Sociology, Race and Ethnic Relations and Medical Sociology. "Bill Hanson became a dynamic presence in the department from almost the day he arrived on campus," said Jon Olson, associate professor of sociology. "His passion for social justice was evident early on, and his passion for teaching led students to get involved in the community long before we had a COAR office."

Olson recalled Hanson's teaching style during his 24 years at the institution.

"He urged students to think for themselves and to use the concepts he was teaching in developing their own analysis of issues," she said. "He employed a variety of creative, participatory teaching styles long before they were in vogue."

As a member of the UMW community, Hanson helped to establish an on-campus memorial bust for his friend, James Farmer, the late Civil Rights leader. He was involved in programs at the James Farmer Multicultural Center as well as Project SOAR, a program that allowed minority students attending secondary schools to be introduced to higher education and college preparatory classes.

Dr. Ameeta Vashee Rajagopal, director of the James Farmer Multicultural Center, was impressed by Hanson's activist interests and their effects on students.

"He was a huge activist for Civil Rights for his entire life so he really brought that to campus in a number of different ways," said Rajagopal. "We often had students stopping in the office saying they were in his class and they wanted to find more about 'What can I do on campus to promote civil rights, to become an activist?'"

Rajagopal also had the opportunity to witness Hanson in action.

"It was always magical to watch Bill in the

► See HANSON, page 2

Mobile Food Cart Not "On The Go"

By TOM ALLISON
Staff Writer

They've got the food. They've got the equipment.

So where is that mobile food cart?

"Right now, it's a simple matter of the weather," said Steve Mangan, general manager of dining services at the University of Mary Washington. "It just doesn't make sense for the students or the employees to have it out there in winter."

Mangan said the cart is expected to be back in use on March 1.

Near the end of last semester, dining services introduced the mobile food cart that would help reduce lines at the Eagles Nest and Seacobeck dining hall, by making coffee, bagels, drinks and sandwiches available at different locations around campus.

As The Bullet reported last September, the cart was purchased from Mobile Food Solutions, a company that specializes in the manufacturing of mobile food carts.

Despite being in use for only two weeks in bad weather, the cart made about 30 to 50 transactions a day.

"It just kind of sat outside the Eagles Nest.

It'd be nice if it could make it out to Trinkle at least" said sophomore Conner Maloney.

Randall Farren, a sophomore and environmental science major had a concern other than the cart's absence.

"It's too bad that they had to brick over that flower bed outside the post office," he said.

So what is keeping the mobile food cart from completing its objective of food mobility?

"Students just don't carry cash. They rely on their meal plan and their Eagle One cards. So until we can get the wireless network up and running in other locations, the cart will stay outside the Eagles Nest, and continue to use the wireless that's broadcast from the library," Mangan said.

Administrative leadership has been carefully planning the University's wireless network service for the past few years, and hope to have some kind of plan functional by the end of the year.

"Because the University has waited a bit before diving into extensive deployment of wireless networking, we've been able to take advantage of the experience of other institutions in designing our version of one," said Chip German, vice president of the department of

► See CART, page 2

Emily Nicotera/Bullet

The mobile food cart is inactive and resides behind Seacobeck Hall.

Dry Season Benefits Athletes

By KERRI SCALES
Staff Writer

Of the 17 teams and 13 coaches at the University of Mary Washington, only three coaches choose to enforce a stricter alcohol policy than that set forth by the athletic department.

UMW coaches Dana Hall, Dee Conway and Matthew Kinney all follow the same basic guideline for implementing a dry season: stronger performance by their players.

Kinney, who serves as the head coach for both the men's and women's swim teams, said, "Imposing a dry season serves two purposes; one is that the physical aspects of alcohol are negative when going into any competition. The other factor is more mental and is based on committing to something as a team."

For Kinney, implementing a dry season grew to be very beneficial. Last year he watched as both teams took the title of Capitol Athletic Conference champions and saw several members go on to represent UMW in the NCAA Division III championships.

The eight colleges and universities in the Capitol Athletic Conference do not follow the same policy regarding alcohol abuse, and some schools such as York College choose to enforce a completely dry season for their student athletes, regardless of age. The athletic director at York College, Betsy Whitman, notes that the sanctions for violators of the alcohol policy are decided by the individual coaches.

Bill Finney, athletic director at Marymount University enforces a completely dry season for those student athletes who are not of age. Finney asks his student athletes to abide by this rule even when they are out of season, and adds that he too has seen several athletes lose playing time due to drinking.

"As much as I hate to say it, I see more and more great athletes lose time in competition because they would rather go out and have a good time at a party," Finney said. "The only way to stop this behavior is to enforce stricter punishments for the offenders."

The University of Mary Washington athletic department enforces a baseline alcohol policy for their student athletes. Under this agreement, student athletes agree that they will not consume any alcoholic beverage 48 hours prior

► See DRY, page 2

5 Day Forecast

TODAY
Partly Cloudy

High: 45
Low: 27

FRIDAY
Showers

High: 45
Low: 27

SATURDAY
Mostly Sunny

High: 49
Low: 25

SUNDAY
Partly Cloudy

High: 47
Low: 30

MONDAY
Partly Cloudy

High: 48
Low: 35

Verbatim ...

"Maybe I can start selling cookies door-to-door to pay for my internet here."

—Alex Engel, page 3

Peter Kelley/Bullet

Wood Is Burning: Men's basketball coach Rod Wood fumes during his team's 50-46 loss to Catholic University last night. Full story, see page 12.

Mobile Food Cart Not "On The Go"

By TOM ALLISON
Staff Writer

They've got the food. They've got the equipment.

So where is that mobile food cart? "Right now, it's a simple matter of the weather," said Steve Mangan, general manager of dining services at the University of Mary Washington. "It just doesn't make sense for the students or the employees to have it out there in winter."

Mangan said the cart is expected to be back in use on March 1.

Near the end of last semester, dining services introduced the mobile food cart that would help reduce lines at the Eagles Nest and Seacobeck dining hall, by making coffee, bagels, drinks and sandwiches available at different locations around campus.

As The Bulletin reported last September, the cart was purchased from Mobile Food Solutions, a company that specializes in the manufacturing of mobile food carts.

Despite being in use for only two weeks in bad weather, the cart made about 30 to 50 transactions a day.

"It just kind of sat outside the Eagles Nest.

It'd be nice if it could make it out to Trinkle at least" said sophomore Conner Maloney.

Randall Farten, a sophomore and environmental science major had a concern other than the cart's absence.

"It's too bad that they had to brick over that flower bed outside the post office," he said.

So what is keeping the mobile food cart from completing its objective of food mobility?

"Students just don't carry cash. They rely on their meal plan and their Eagle One cards. So until we can get the wireless network up and running in other locations, the cart will stay outside the Eagles Nest, and continue to use the wireless that's broadcast from the library," Mangan said.

Administrative leadership has been carefully planning the University's wireless network service for the past few years, and hope to have some kind of plan functional by the end of the year.

"Because the University has waited a bit before diving into extensive deployment of wireless networking, we've been able to take advantage of the experience of other institutions in designing our version of one," said Chip German, vice president of the department of

► See CART, page 2

Emily Nicotera/Bullet

The mobile food cart is inactive and resides behind Seacobeck Hall.

Associate Professor Of Sociology Dies Monday At Age 64

By COREY BYERS
News Editor

William Byrd Hanson, associate professor of sociology and past chair of the sociology and anthropology department, died on Monday, Jan. 31 after suffering from a rare lung disease, idiopathic pulmonary fibrosis.

Hanson, who was 64, taught from 1981 until the spring of 2004. Hanson began working at the University of Mary Washington full-time in 1981 and worked part-time in 1996 after undergoing a lung transplant surgery. He is survived by his wife Roxane and their two adult children, son Jesse, and daughter Megan. His family was by his side when he passed away early Monday morning.

Before he came to UMW, Hanson was an associate professor at California State University at Bakersfield and an assistant professor at Providence College. He received his doctoral degree in medical sociology from Brown University.

Hanson taught several sociology courses at the university, including Civil Rights in the New Millennium, Urban Sociology, Race and Ethnic Relations and Medical Sociology.

"Bill Hanson became a dynamic presence in the department from almost the day he arrived on campus," said Joan Olson, associate professor of sociology. "His passion for social justice was evident early on, and his passion for teaching led students to get involved in the community long before we had a COAR office."

Olson recalled Hanson's teaching style during

his 24 years at the institution.

"He urged students to think for themselves and to use the concepts he was teaching in developing their own analysis of issues," she said. "He employed a variety of creative, participatory teaching styles long before they were in vogue."

As a member of the UMW community, Hanson helped to establish an on-campus memorial bust for his friend, James Farmer, the late Civil Rights leader. He was involved in programs at the James Farmer Multicultural Center as well as Project SOAR, a program that allowed minority students attending secondary schools to be introduced to higher education and college preparatory classes.

Dr. Ameeta

Vashee Rajagopal, director of the James Farmer Multicultural Center, was impressed by Hanson's activist interests and their effects on students.

"He was a huge activist for Civil Rights for his entire life so he really brought that to campus in a number of different ways," said Rajagopal. "We often had students stopping in the office saying they were in his class and they wanted to find more about 'What can I do on campus to promote civil rights, to become an activist?'"

Rajagopal also had the opportunity to witness Hanson in action.

"It was always magical to watch Bill in the

► See HANSON, page 2

Dry Season Benefits Athletes

By KERRI SCALES
Staff Writer

Of the 17 teams and 13 coaches at the University of Mary Washington, only three coaches choose to enforce a stricter alcohol policy than that set forth by the athletic department.

UMW coaches Dana Hall, Dee Conway and Matthew Kinney all follow the same basic guideline for implementing a dry season: stronger performance by their players.

Kinney, who serves as the head coach for both the men's and women's swim teams, said, "Imposing a dry season serves two purposes; one is that the physical aspects of alcohol are negative when going into any competition. The other factor is more mental and is based on committing to something as a team."

For Kinney, implementing a dry season grew to be very beneficial. Last year he watched as both teams took the title of Capitol Athletic Conference champions and saw several members go on to represent UMW in the NCAA Division III championships.

The eight colleges and universities in the Capitol Athletic Conference do not follow the same policy regarding alcohol abuse, and some schools such as York College choose to enforce a completely dry season for their student athletes, regardless of age. The athletic director at York College, Betsy Whitman, notes that the sanctions for violators of the alcohol policy are decided by the individual coaches.

Bill Finney, athletic director at Marymount University enforces a completely dry season for those student athletes who are not of age. Finney asks his student athletes to abide by this rule even when they are out of season, and adds that he too has seen several athletes lose playing time due to drinking.

"As much as I hate to say it, I see more and more great athletes lose time in competition because they would rather go out and have a good time at a party," Finney said. "The only way to stop this behavior is to enforce stricter punishments for the offenders."

The University of Mary Washington athletic department enforces a baseline alcohol policy for their student athletes. Under this agreement, student athletes agree that they will not consume any alcoholic beverage 48 hours prior

► See DRY, page 2

5 Day Forecast

TODAY
Partly Cloudy

High: 45
Low: 27

FRIDAY
Showers

High: 45
Low: 27

SATURDAY
Mostly Sunny

High: 49
Low: 25

SUNDAY
Partly Cloudy

High: 47
Low: 30

MONDAY
Partly Cloudy

High: 48
Low: 35

Verbatim ...

"Maybe I can start selling cookies door-to-door to pay for my internet here."

—Alex Engel, page 3

Police Beat

By STEPHANIE TAIT
News Editor

Jan. 28—At 1:23 p.m., police responded to a fire alarm in the UMW Apartment building 1102. According to police, a student attempted to cook bread on the stove and the smoke from this cooking set off the fire alarm. The Fredericksburg Fire Department helped clear the area of smoke and there was no damage to the apartment.

Jan. 30—Around midnight police received a report of a student, who appeared to be unsteady, walking barefoot around George Washington circle. According to police, they then broadcasted the description of the student to all officers on patrol and to groundskeepers who were clearing snow at the time. At 3:33 a.m., a female matching the same description came into the police station intoxicated and asking for a ride to her residence on Charles Street, according to police. Police said the officer at the time judged the student, Rebecca Sellers, a 21-year-old commuter student, was not in the condition to be released on her own due to her intoxication. Police arrested Sellers for being drunk in public.

Jan. 30—At 3:15 p.m., a 19-year-old resident of Bushnell Hall and a 20-year-old resident of Bushnell Hall reported to police that their room had been broken into. The two students, who are roommates, reported that items in the room had been moved around and damaged. According to police, an investigation found the break in to be a result of a suite-mate conflict and the suite-mate, a 19-year-old female, was referred to Residence Life.

Jan. 31—A 56-year-old female employee of Seabrook Hall reported to police that, between 4 p.m. and 9:25 p.m., someone vandalized her vehicle. According to police, there appeared to be fingernail polish on the exterior of the vehicle and damages were minimal. According to police, the victim said she had an idea of who had vandalized her vehicle, but refused to say who it was. The case has been put on inactive status.

Donor Offers $500,000 To UMW's Great Lives Series

By MELINA RODRIGUEZ
Staff Writer

Tonight, Eleanor of Aquitaine will visit the University of Mary Washington campus, in spirit that is.

Teresa Kennedy, professor in the department of English, linguistics, and speech, will give a lecture on this legendary medieval queen. But how is this possible?

After learning about last year's Great Lives Lecture Series, donor John Chappell of Villanova, Penn. decided he wanted his $1.5 million donation to help continue the event. Chappell decided to donate the memorial gift to the university in the memory of his late wife, Carmen Chappell who attended UMW.

As reported in the alumni magazine, "UMW Today," the Board of Visitors expressed interest in building a bell tower and knowing of this Chappell designated $1 million toward its construction.

According to Ron Singleton, senior vice president for advancement and University relations, the remaining $500,000 of the endowment was designated to the Great Lives Lecture Series.

Singleton said Chappell's original gift of $500,000 is invested and the Great Lives Series is funded with the interest produced. The earned interest will provide approximately $25,000 this year. The $25,000 will, in turn, provide payment to the speakers. According to Singleton, all speakers receive an honorarium, and in the cases of visiting speakers, the money will provide travel, lodging, food, and any other necessities.

"The IRS requires that the principle [$500,000] remains intact and the program spends the earnings," Singleton said. The $500,000 should last forever because it is invested and the program is only allowed to use the interest gained from the original gift.

Every Thursday at 7:30 p.m., the Great Lives Lecture Series presents speakers on a diverse range of public figures. This year's topics include subjects ranging from Eleanor of Aquitaine to Elvis Presley.

Last year's lecture series was so successful that larger venues were required to provide room for all of the attendees. The lectures, originally taking place in Monroe, were moved to larger venues such as the Great Hall, Lee Ballroom and Dodd Auditorium for this year.

In the spring semester of 2004, the department of history and American studies created the course HIST: 200. This course was created as another option for an upper level history course. William Crawley, professor of history and American studies, taught this course in addition to his already full schedule.

"Professor William B. Crawley agreed to teach this course as an 'overflow,' that is, as an additional course over and above his normal teaching load," said Carter Hudgins, professor in the department of history and American studies. "Professor Crawley donated the salary he received to the University so that the Department of History and American Studies could draw on those funds to support the series," he said. The sum allowed for some type of compensation for all of the speakers at last year's Great Lives Series, which consisted fully of UMW faculty.

"That small fund allowed us to pay each of last year's presenters a modest honorarium," Hudgins said.

This year's lecture series includes six UMW faculty members and six speakers from off campus, who are authors of various books on a wide range of subjects. There are receptions held after the presentations by visiting speakers. These receptions are also paid for by the endowment.

According to Singleton the endowment allows the program to pay a higher honorarium and therefore attract nationally known speakers.

"The success of Great Lives last year drew attention to the series both here on campus and in the wider Mary Washington community," said Hudgins. "That interest has led to new funding sources that have allowed us to weave into the series not only presentations by members of our faculty but to include writers and scholars from off campus who are authors of recent books and biographies."

Singleton said that as the lecture series continues and more businesses and foundations learn about it additional donations and gifts will be added to the original $500,000. In addition, the University will actively continue to seek out donors to keep the lecture series a common event on the university campus.

According to Crawley all of the lectures draw a large crowd, but in particular he predicts that the lectures on Mozart, Napoleon, Roosevelt and Churchill and Jack and Jackie Kennedy will have an enormous turnout.

Professor Mourned

4 HANSON, page 1

classroom," she said. "When he taught [for] Project SOAR...I sat in on his class once and he was discussing class issues; it's hard to make class issues come alive [but] he had the class subdivided: 'You're going to be the blue-collar, you're white-collar.' Everyone's desks were separated and he was sitting in the middle and facilitating this whole thing and the students were just mesmerized."

Junior Kiera Evans, who was a student of Hanson's, said she relied on his life experiences in order to teach.

"As a Civil Rights professor he was involved early in the Civil Rights movement so...he could tell personal stories about what we were learning," Evans said. "It made for a...better class."

Evans went on to share her thoughts on Hanson's demeanor. "He really loved what he taught...you could see that he had so much enthusiasm for everything he taught...he was really down to earth," she said.

Timothy Crippen, professor of sociology, believes Hanson provided a spark in the everyday affairs of the department as well as in social gatherings.

"His enthusiasm for his craft and for life in general could be infectious, and his presence will be sorely missed," Crippen said.

Crippen recalled how his colleague stayed positive despite his prolonged health problems.

"This past summer, as Bill faced what proved to be his final health crisis, he talked as if he would undergo yet another major surgery and still be prepared to resume teaching his scheduled class by early October," he said. "Sadly, things worked out differently, but the attitude expressed was Bill to the core. Teaching was his calling, and his daily actions were a constant reminder of that simple fact of his life."

Beatrice Kerr, an alumna of the class of 1990 and sociology major, chose Hanson as her academic advisor when she attended UMW. During her time as a student, she worked on an individual research project on AIDS which Hanson oversaw.

"He was tough, he asked me a lot of pointed questions and tried to get me focused," she said. "He pushed me to do more research and ask more in-depth questions. He really wanted to see his students grow. I think that's the work of a really great teacher."

Kerr said one of the defining features of Hanson's personality was his sense of humor. She was close with Hanson and his family and was present with him during his final weeks in the hospital.

"I would sit with him, and he kept pointing to something in the room," she said. It was a palm-size strength ball.

"He wanted me to throw the ball to him," Kerr said. "He threw it back, he wanted to play, that was very Bill; in the ICU it's so serious and somber but he just wanted to play."

Hanson's son Jesse, a Mary Washington graduate now living in California, returned to Virginia to be with his father earlier this week. He had made several trips home over the past several months to join his mother and sister in caring for Hanson after his native lung failed and he had unsuccessful surgery last October.

"He had a gift of profound understanding," Jesse Hanson said. "He was an amazing father, we will miss him a lot."

Roxane Hanson was with her husband almost constantly over the past several months as Hanson's health declined.

"He taught me as much, if not more, in death, as he did in life about love, courage, and strength," she said.

A campus memorial service for Hanson will be held on Saturday, Feb. 5 at 1 p.m. in the Lee Hall Ballroom.

Andrew Deci and Stephanie Tait contributed to this story.

Courtesy University Relations

Professor William Hanson.

Athletic Teams Benefit From Dry Seasons, Study Says

4 DRY, page 1

to, or during competition.

The athletic department also follows a process of sanctions for those student athletes found guilty of violating the alcohol policy. A first offense results in the student athlete being suspended from their next scheduled competition, a second offense results in a suspension from their next two scheduled competitions, and a third offense results in an expulsion from the Intercollegiate Athletic Program.

Men's soccer coach Roy Gordon believes that the alcohol policy enforced by the athletic department is sufficient and therefore he does not have stricter rules concerning alcohol.

"The athletic department's alcohol policy seems to be an appropriate reality for life in college," Gordon said. "I am in no way condoning the use of alcohol or underage drinking, but I do not think that having a dry season is any more reasonable than the policy set forth by the department."

Gordon has been the head coach of the UMW men's soccer team for 27 years. Gordon has led his team to eight Capital Athletic Conference titles since 1985, and has been named the CAC coach of the year seven times.

According to a national survey conducted by Harvard professor Henry Wechsler, student athletes are at a higher risk for binge drinking, heavier alcohol use and alcohol related injuries.

According to the study, male student athletes are binge drinking 16 percent more and female athletes are binge drinking 19 percent more than their non-athletic peers.

The study surveyed 12,777 college students, 17 percent of which were student athletes, at 130 four-year colleges and universities across 40 states.

In addition, student athletes surveyed also reported experiencing more academic problems and more anti-social behaviors, such as damaging property and getting into trouble with the police.

The NCAA does not implement a nationwide alcohol policy, but strongly encourages all schools to create and enforce their own.

Dana Hall, who has been the head coach of the UMW women's field hockey and women's lacrosse teams for the past 15 years, agrees with the alcohol policy set forth by the department.

"The alcohol policy is not here to punish the athletes, it is here to help them perform better," Hall said. "I came here and turned a team that was known as the 'party team' into national champions."

Hall implements a dry season for her field hockey team, but only enforces the baseline alcohol policy suggested by the department for her lacrosse team. Hall adds that her field hockey team chooses to follow a dry season for personal reasons.

UMW senior and field hockey co-captain Amanda Mulhern admits that following a dry season has affected her social life, but adds that it helps bring the players on the team closer together.

"I will admit that sometimes I have been less likely to go out because I don't feel like dealing with drunk shenanigans," Mulhern said. "However, our dry season has definitely helped the team come a lot closer."

Senior Joanna Duggan agrees with her fellow co-captain in that having a dry season allows them to bond in a different way, but admits that some players may choose not to follow the policy.

"It's taken seriously but you can't always be watching every player on your team at every moment," Duggan said. "So you have to trust that they take it as seriously as you do."

UMW seniors and co-captains of the men's lacrosse team Jamie Stoddard, Lee Thompson, Dave Justen and Drew Cartwright have decided to take their team's alcohol policy to a new extreme this season, stating academics and a challenging game schedule as incentives for the change.

"Our schedule is harder than ever this year and as a group we knew we had to make some sacrifices if we wanted to be successful," Thompson said. "We also have a lot of people struggling academically so it makes a lot of sense."

The captains, who made the decision without the guidance of their coach Kurt Glaser, have found many ways to entertain themselves without consuming alcohol, including ping pong games in the Wash Room and hosting a milk chugging contest.

"It has actually made us closer because we are able to spend quality time with each other while other people are out drinking," said Thompson.

Food Cart Parked

4 CART, page 1

information technologies. The University is currently conducting surveys to establish where wireless access spots should be located most efficiently. Among the most likely spots are Combs, Jepson and Trinkle Halls, with the possibility of residence halls, and Seabrook dining hall. The library "pilot" network will also remain in use.

Right now, the administration has only a rough estimate for how much a transition to wireless would cost.

"The current estimate would be approximately $1,500 per access point," said Erna Baker, assistant vice president for business services. "For an academic building, we are estimating about 15 access points per building, meaning the cost would be $17,500, plus about $2,500 per building to survey and identify where each point should be placed, for a total of about $20,000 per building."

German said the mobile food cart's needs will be taken into account during this planning process.

"Certainly wireless in outside spaces, including those to be used by the mobile food cart will be on that list, but at this point, we're not sure where quite yet," German said.

For now, the mobile food cart will remain parked behind Seabrook Hall, out of use throughout the winter. But come springtime, with the sun shining and flowers blooming, the mobile cart will be delivering snacks and drinks around campus.

Corrections

In last week's edition, Rita Thompson said, "Some people see it as being dismal, but I see it as an opportunity and a challenge for the University of Mary Washington to reach out to minorities and the underrepresented populations." She was misquoted in the story on Jan. 27.

Viewpoints

More
Viewpoints
Page 9

Editorial Remember

February began with Punksutawney Phil crawling out of his hole and seeing his shadow, and thus dooming the world to six more months of winter.

February is a singular month. We all know about the groundhog, and whether we love it or hate, we all know about Valentine's Day.

But it seems that people have forgotten what is quite possibly the most important thing about the second month of the year: The fact that it is the month designated to remember black history.

Back in elementary school, we all had to do projects about Harriet Tubman or Malcolm X or Booker T. Washington or Frederick Douglass.

But not anymore.

Let's all try to remember the contributions that these Americans made to our country.

Show a little gratitude. Spread some love. It's almost Valentine's Day, after all.

Locked Out

Trinkle B12 used to be a haven for bleary-eyed students. It used to be full of procrastinators, scrambling at the eleventh hour to finish papers and assignments.

Those days are gone.

Why?

The lab has been closed without explanation, but faculty and computer science majors know the code to the room. What used to be open to all is now an elitist paradise.

One would suspect that the lab is now on limited hours because of the recent computer hacking into the political science department's e-mail account.

The police actually seized the computer and sent it to Richmond for investigation. The school's reaction to the event is laughable, but certainly seems like it would deter any students who may in the future want to write phony e-mails. If the now-infamous e-mail is the reason for locking students out, it seems like the University is punishing its hard-working students to make a display of a stupid college prank.

After the school's ridiculous overreaction, why would anyone attempt such a prank again? The point is, that if the lab is on limited hours because of this reason, it's entirely unnecessary.

Students received that e-mail early afternoon on a Sunday. The lab is still open on weekends.

The Macintosh lab is still open twenty-four hours a day. But there are fewer computers in the Macintosh lab.

Someone has some explaining to do about why the student are now locked out.

Trouble In Trinkle

By ALEX ENGEL
Guest Columnist

Recently, some members of the University of Mary Washington population may have noticed something missing from their daily routine.

No, I don't mean the food cart outside of the Eagles Nest, nor do I mean all the missing snow from Saturday's storm. What I'm talking about is our internet connection.

If you have tried to use your X-Box Live lately, played a game like "Counter Strike: Source," or tried to download anything at all, you know exactly what I'm talking about. Our internet connection seems to have dried up.

Here are the facts: Starting in 2002-2003, Mary Washington implemented a plan to upgrade the existing server database, an obsolete HP 3000 model, to a model offered by SunGard SCT.

The SCT Banner system, the "SCT Banner Unified Digital Campus" system promised to be "nothing less than a University-wide restructuring of our information environment, improving the way we all do our jobs, and serve our UMW community."

Unfortunately for us students, this was proven not to be the case on Monday, Jan. 17. That day, the Banner employee self-service function was added to the existing Banner finance and advancement systems. The result of this addition caused a catastrophic degradation of the UMW network.

As a result of the increased server load, a drastic limitation policy was placed on the network for many applications, including almost every internet video game and practically all file-sharing programs. A week later, we're left with a connection that's only slightly faster than dial-up.

If you've played any games online or tried to sign onto any file-sharing program, you know what I mean. We're going at less than 10 kilobytes per second here, which is a huge decrease from the hefty speeds we'd become accustomed to before.

When I first asked the Information Technology department about the problems, I was told that the network was being used by "mission critical applications," and that further adjustments may be made.

When I went down in person, I was politely told that there was little to be done, that Banner was using a massive chunk of the network and they were trying their best, but there wouldn't be a return to the way things were before. Instead, there would be a communal five-megabyte pipe for all members of the on-campus UMW community. This would apply to everything not directly Web-related, i.e. streaming music/video, file-sharing, and most video games. How fast your connection goes depends on how many people are online.

Now hold on a second. Aren't we promised a high-speed internet connection if we live here? According to the Technology Assistance Center, "All computers at faculty and staff workstations, computer labs, the library and residence hall rooms provide a high-speed connection to the internet."

Unfortunately, we're not getting it. To put this in perspective, most streaming video (music videos from Launchcast, MTV videos from mtv.com) go at about 100-300 kilobytes per second. At most, 17 people could stream video at our current bandwidth. There are roughly 1000K in a megabyte. So, you have 5000K, divided by (at most) 300K, and you get a maximum of 17 people able to use the internet. If you have people file-sharing at high speeds (which can get up to 1 megabyte per second) then you run out of internet with really fast bandwidth almost immediately.

But wait, there's more. The SCT Banner system, for which we've sacrificed our internet, was also recently implemented at George Mason University. On Jan. 3, at George Mason University, over 32,000 GMU students and staff had their names, photos and social security numbers stolen by an unidentified intruder.

How are we to know that the same won't happen here? It's entirely possible that this intruder could strike at our network with the knowledge he gained from the GMU intrusion. With our bandwidth gobbled up by this program and with our IT department working furiously trying to fix the bugs, how long would it take for us to figure out someone had hacked the system?

Perhaps the worst thing about all this is the fact that we, as students, were not notified about a single bit of it at all.

Not a single e-mail was sent out explaining why we suddenly lost so many of our internet functions on Jan. 17. Instead, we're stuck behind the typical Mary Washington cloud of bureaucracy.

A simple solution would be to increase the bandwidth here, but knowing the penny-pinchers that run the school, that's not likely. Instead, we'll probably have to wait until the system is outdated, and then there will be another mad rush to pursue the technology curve.

Is there anything we can do? Maybe I can start selling cookies door-to-door to pay for my internet here. Or maybe we can dock the exorbitantly high salary of President Anderson to pay for some decent speed.

Better yet, why don't we take some of the $1.5 million allocated to the bell tower and spend that on something that is actually meaningful to the students, instead of a symbol that will probably go to the Sodexio of building contractors and fall down in 10 years.

I want an answer from the administration saying when we'll get our network back.

When will I be able to play games that I bought, and when will I get the high-speed I was promised?

Sarah Cannon, a senior, responds to calls at the TAC

Andrew Deci/Bullet

Alex Engel is a junior.

The Bulletin
www.thebulletonline.com

Serving the University of Mary Washington
Community since 1922.

Editor in Chief
Katie Teller

Associate Editor
Andrew Hall

News Editor:
News Editor:
Viewpoints Editor:
Features Editor:
Sports Editor:
Scene Editor:
Photo Editor:
Copy Editor:
Cartoonist:
Cartoonist:
Business Manager:
Subscriptions Manager: Adviser:

Corey Byers
Stephanie Tait
Emily Sala
Stephanie Twining
Dave Buschenfeldt
Lesley Johnson
Andrew Deci
Amanda Criesup
Sara Nemati
Matt Czaplewski
Kate Oswald
Suzanne Davey
Suzanne Davey
Steve Watkins

Assistant Viewpoints Editor:
Assistant Features Editor:
Assistant Scene Editor:
Assistant Photo Editor:
Graphic Designer:

Jiji Perilla
Niki Larson
Tierney Plumb
Katy Hershberger
Dan Coo
Christin Connors

Letter and Editorial Policy

The Bulletin is always eager to receive letters to the editor and guest columns, and every effort is made to print them.

Letters should be submitted the Monday before publication. Letters should be no longer than 300 words, and columns should not exceed 700 words.

We will not publish anonymous submissions. Letters must include a phone number and address for purposes of verification. They can be mailed to The Bulletin at 1701 College Avenue, Fredericksburg, VA, 22401-4666, delivered to our office in Seacobeck Hall or sent to our email address at bullet@umw.edu.

Opinions expressed in columns or letters to the editor do not necessarily reflect the views of the staff. Contact The Bulletin at 540-654-1133.

The Bulletin is published on Thursday afternoons during the fall and spring semesters. All decisions are made by the editorial board, independent of The Bulletin adviser.

Features

There's No Time Like Snow Time

By BRITTANY SHORT
Staff Writer

Freshman Anna Guatham and her friends took advantage of the snowfall on Saturday, Jan. 29.

"My friends and I were outside playing in the snow and we saw two guys who had a sled and we went up to them and asked if we could borrow it and they said yes," Guatham said.

She and a group of about 10 of her friends took the sled to the hill next to Mercer Hall.

"We took turns going down the hill trying not to fall off of the drop-off at the end of the hill into the creek. We had a lot of fun. We kept throwing snow at each other and tackling each other. It was really crazy."

Many University of Mary Washington students are enjoying the snowy weather this season.

Junior Elliott Jones goes skiing with friends as often as he can at Massanutten Resort.

Massanutten, located only 10 minutes east of Harrisonburg—about an hour and 45 minutes from Fredericksburg, is popular with University of Mary Washington students.

"I really like the friendliness of the staff, plus they have really good trails," Jones said. "Massanutten has really good black diamond slopes."

Many students are choosing to go to Massanutten because of their "Monday Night Madness" ski and snowboarding rates.

From 5 p.m. until 10 p.m. on Monday nights, both ski lift tickets and equipment rentals are only $12 each.

Wednesday and Friday nights, lift tickets and rentals at Massanutten are $20 and $20 and rentals are $15 if you have a Massanutten pass. Massanutten boasts 70 trails for skiing/snowboarding, with 14 trails for night skiing.

Wintergreen Resort is also another ski resort that attracts many students.

Sophomore Matthew Hubbard has skied at Wintergreen Resort many times.

"There is something for everyone at Wintergreen, whatever level you are," Hubbard said. "I would prefer somewhere out west, but it is close and they are currently working on expanding the resort."

Hubbard also enjoys the snow tubing at Wintergreen.

"They have two separate tubing hills," he said. "They are pretty good. You get some awesome air."

Located in Wintergreen, the resort is a little over two hours from Fredericksburg. It boasts a new high-speed chair lift called 'The Highlands Express,' which reaches the top in less than four minutes, according to the resort's Web site.

Wintergreen also offers free beginner lessons with rentals, and 'The plunge,' a 900-foot-long tubing park with ten lanes.

College student specials at Wintergreen are on Tuesdays and Thursdays. Lift tickets are $30 during the day and $20 at night.

While many students travel to ski resorts during the winter season, others may choose to enjoy a winter activity indoors.

without having to pay anything.

Freshman Erin Reyhan spent Wednesday, Jan. 19, snowboarding down a hill near the Alumni Executive Center on Hanover Street.

"I'm not from Virginia, so I don't really know where any resorts are yet," Reyhan said. "Plus I don't have a ride, so I decided to snowboard on campus. I love snowboarding. It's more unconventional and I like doing different things."

As the weather seems to get colder every day, many students are still excited about increased snow accumulation.

Freshman Leslie McGlothlin, who is from Florida, isn't used to seeing snowy weather.

"It's been really exciting. Even though it's hard adjusting to the cold, it does make my first snow much more fun than my best friends," she said. "We had to build a snowman on Saturday night that was only eight inches tall."

McGlothlin and her friends learned from her leftover Chinese food, because a normal carrot would have been too big.

"My friends and I are remembering a lot of really fun memories, and I'm looking forward to even more snow," she said.

The

Fredericksburg

Ice Park contains an indoor skating rink where students can partake in public skating sessions.

Located in downtown Central Park, the Fredericksburg Ice Park holds public skating sessions between 10 a.m. until 3 p.m. Mondays through Fridays, with an additional evening session from 7 p.m. to 10 p.m. on Fridays.

The Park also has scheduled weekend skate times. On a weekday, tickets cost $5, on weekends, $8 and rentals cost $2.

Even though there are many activities students can pay to participate in, many students are also taking advantage of the winter weather and enjoying themselves

Welcom

Students Meet And Greet On College-Geared Web Site

By KATY HERSHBERGER
Assistant Scene Editor

Junior Mandy Gabriel was recently re-united with a friend that she has not seen in six years, thanks to Thefacebook.com.

"One of my old friends found me on Thefacebook.com and sent me a message," she said. "It was nice to hear from someone I haven't talked to in years."

Thefacebook.com describes itself as "an online directory that connects people through social networks at colleges and universities."

It is a virtual representation of traditional college facebook, like the New Student Record that University of Mary Washington students receive as freshmen.

"Everyone is doing it," said senior Vitto Amnathvong, a member of Thefacebook.com.

Freshman Emma Klement enjoys being a member.

"My friends at other schools had it and really liked having it," she said. "It connects people, especially those you don't see much."

Thefacebook.com, which is not associated with the university, allows students to create a profile for themselves. In their profile, students can post a picture and contact information like e-mail address, screen name and home address.

There is also a place for personal information like favorite music, books, movies and quotes. Profiles also have a feature called "the wall," an open forum for friends to post comments for each other.

"My friends and I love the wall because we leave each other cryptic messages about inside jokes and stuff that no one else will understand," said freshman Nicole Cerie.

Users can send private messages and "poke" each other. Poking is like a virtual high-five, and according to Thefacebook.com staff, has no specific purpose.

Searching for people on Thefacebook.com, which has over one million total users—2,382 of those from the University of Mary

Washington—has become like an addiction for many students.

"All I do is waste time on there and not do my schoolwork," said junior Elizabeth Willson.

Cerie and her friends are trying to cut back on their use of Thefacebook.com.

"My roommates are really addicted to it, more so than me," she said. "They had to ban it for finals week."

Thefacebook.com allows students to create groups of people with similar interests, such as Mary Wash Young Democrats or Anti-Popped Collar Society. Students may also list the classes they are taking.

Users can list other users as their friends. In order to be someone's friend, both users must electronically confirm that they do, in fact, know each other.

"I like that you can see how you are connected to other people here at UMW through your friends," Cerie said. "I've realized that I didn't know some of my friends knew each other in other ways than through me, so it makes it easier to hang out in a big group."

To date, more than 300 colleges and universities are represented on Thefacebook.com.

Scott Hornick, a junior at Virginia Tech, is a member. "A lot of my friends were talking about how addicting it is, so I checked it out and joined," he said. "It's a good way to meet people through friends or through your classes."

However, not all students see the benefits of Thefacebook.com. "I joined it because I'm an idiot—it's a complete and total waste of time and I haven't spent more than half an hour on it since I joined," freshman Marie Coates said.

Sophomore Scott Berry is an opponent of Thefacebook.com. "It seems like just a trendy way for morons to keep abreast of what their idiot friends are doing," he said.

Thefacebook.com phenomenon began as the brainchild of Mark Zuckerberg, a student at Harvard University. According to Chris

► See FACEBOOK, page 5

Dan Coo / Bulletin

Sophomore Drew Murray searches for friends on Thefacebook.com. Many students spend countless hours confirming, inviting and poking their peers.

Thumbs Up... Thumbs Down...

To Black History month.

To black ice.

To Seacobeck food improving lately.

To the Ashlee Simpson Show.

Send your own thumbs to bullet@umw.edu

Student Teaches With Leeches

By ERIN ROURKE
Staff Writer

At 9 a.m. on a Saturday morning, while most college students are sleeping, University of Mary Washington sophomore Lindy McWhirt is already hard at work with her friends. Her leech friends, that is.

McWhirt works at Hugh Mercer Apothecary on Caroline Street in downtown Fredericksburg where she educates tourists about leeches and other aspects of colonial medicine.

During the many tours in a four-hour shift, she explains herbal remedies, amputations and takes leeches out of their bowls and displays them for the groups.

"It's not in my job requirement to touch them or play with them in any manner, that's just a perk," she says.

Colonial doctors used leeches to remove bad blood from sick patients, believing that it would cure illness. They also commonly thinned the blood after wintertime to prevent lethargy as the weather warmed. Although modern medicine has removed most of these procedures, some practices still use leeches today.

Since she first started working there three years ago, the 19-year-old Spotsylvania native has enjoyed working with the leeches. In fact, she chose to make an English presentation about medicinal leeches for her English 101 class.

For a presentation visual, she borrowed a leech from work, affectionately named him Rigatoni, and kept him in her dorm room for a week.

"He was a good guy, stayed in his jar. He bit me, that was kind of exciting," she said. "I freaked out and flipped him back in the jar."

Being informed about the creatures helps as well. By keeping them well-fed and making sure they stay on the palms of her hands, where the skin is tougher, there is little danger of the leeches actually latching on and sucking blood.

Despite the careful handling, some tourists still feel uneasy. Many get anxious as she goes to pull the leeches out of their bowls, even though the tourists never get close. Some react to the point of getting physically ill.

"We almost make it a points game," McWhirt said. "If you have a person pass out, a person have to leave the room, you get so many points. I've had people pass out, I've had people leave, I had one kid who almost threw up."

There are some tourists who enjoy the leech demonstration. Some show interest in buying them for themselves; others want to touch them.

"We had a woman who was very fond of them and just all she wanted to do was stroke the leech," McWhirt recalled.

Working at the historical site has brought McWhirt into contact with a wide variety of tourists from all over the world. Some are just curious, while others want to discuss and compare current medical practices to those of the colonial world.

Tourists can do some strange things when they encounter the employees at the Apothecary. Countless people peek in the window, try to wave at them and even want to take pictures of their shoes. Such requests are common, considering that the employees wear replicas of authentic colonial clothing.

"My favorite tourists of all time were the two Korean men with cameras who wanted to take me to dinner at Clubborne's afterward," McWhirt said with a laugh. "They thought I was so brave for touching the leech and they had to reward me with dinner. That was pretty cool. I didn't go, obviously. That would have been sketchy."

The average number of people that come through varies by season. Winter is the slowest season, while business peaks during the spring and summer.

School groups routinely show up, bringing up to 200 students in one day. These are her favorite groups.

"It's great to see the kids freak out," she said. "We do a lot of hands-on stuff with them."

McWhirt wanted a job to prepare for a future career. "I actually got the job when I was looking into going in the field of historic preservation," she said. "All through high school when I worked there I thought I was going to get into museum work."

Hayley Amey / Bulletin

Sophomore Lindy McWhirt dresses in historical clothing for her job at the Hugh Mercer Apothecary Shop on Caroline Street downtown.

The apothecary manager offered her a job while she was applying to serve as a walking tour guide in Fredericksburg. When that job fell through, she went back to the apothecary.

"I went down there and I was like, 'Hey, remember me? I kind of like leeches. Hire me!'" So she did," McWhirt said.

Before she could begin working, she had to memorize a five-page script outlining the tour. She also had to read several books and observe tours.

Her freshman classes revealed a passion other than historic preservation: anthropology. McWhirt is now a sociology major with a concentration in anthropology.

McWhirt has found a way to expand her studies while at work. "I still get to observe the people that come in, and the mentality of the tourists is very entertaining to me," she said. "So, even though I kind of changed my future plans, it still kind of applies."

Groundhog Day 2005

Punxsutawney Phil delivered his annual winter prediction yesterday. The famous groundhog saw his shadow on Gobbler's Knob, determining that there will be another six weeks of wintry weather.

Students Confirm Facebook Is A Hit

◀ FACEBOOK, page 4

Hughes, co-founder of Thefacebook.com, Zuckerberg came up with the idea to have an interactive social networking database.

He commissioned four friends, including Hughes, to help with the project and in February 2004, Thefacebook.com was born.

"We wanted students to have control over what information they would provide to their peers—screen names, favorite movies, classes and friends," Hughes said.

"Instead of having just a college-issued facebook with terrible headshots taken at the beginning of your first year and uninteresting information about you. We thought we would provide something like that, but over which each user could have control."

In that vein, he said, Thefacebook.com is a Web site that is both a resource for information, communication and a means for recreation.

Only members of Thefacebook.com can search for other members. Users can only see information about users who go to their school, unless they are friends with someone from another college.

A user can also adjust their privacy settings so that people only see information that he wants them to see.

Despite these precautions, Cedric Rucker, dean of student life, is concerned about students' safety.

"With any online community, students need to be aware that it's a public forum," he said. "Be cautious of the type of information one shares, especially in an era of identity theft, where people are not as kind as they could be."

Hughes is sure that privacy is not a problem.

"We have had surprisingly few complaints about privacy issues, probably because Thefacebook.com is a secure site with a myriad of privacy options," he said. "We're confident that our members are intelligent enough not to give out any personal information that they want to be public. If any user does use the network inappropriately, we'll throw that person off the network. Additionally, any user can block another specific user from seeing her profile by going to her privacy options page."

Crierie is not at all concerned about privacy.

"I put up the information that I want people to be able to access," she said. "If I don't want people to know something, I don't put it on my profile."

Hornick is not worried about his privacy either.

"What's good about Thefacebook.com is that you can put as much on it, so it's up to the person how much information they want to give out," he said. "If you give your screen name you shouldn't be shocked that someone instant messaged you. All you have to do it not post your personal information if you are worried about privacy."

Though Thefacebook.com has taken the campus by storm, Berry does not think the fad will last for long.

"It seems like it's just one of those phenomena that comes, spikes for awhile, and then settles into the background once people get bored with it," he said. "So my prediction is nobody will care in a month or two."

Send your Valentine's Day love to that special someone in your life.

Or write a message for your friends.
Or send in a personal ad.
The Bulletin will publish short messages in the Feb.

10 issue, free of charge.

Follow the examples to the right and send a message to the important people in your life.

E-mail your Valentine's Day messages to bullet@umw.edu
or send by campus mail to The Bulletin, Seacobeck Hall.

Hey baby,

I think you are cute.
Will you be my Valentine?
Yes ___ No ___ Maybe ___

Warm regards,
Your Secret Admirer

Single white female seeking nice boy for long walks on the beach and candlelit dinners.
Good conversation skills a must. If you're looking for love, I'm your girl.

Happy Valentine's Day to all my best friends! We don't need girls in our lives to have a good time.

Hey baby,
Thanks for putting the light inside of my life. I wouldn't be what I am today without you.
XOXO,
Me

Features

There's No Time Like Snow Time

By BRITTANY SHORT
Staff Writer

Freshman Suhva Guatham and her friends took advantage of the snowfall on Saturday, Jan. 23.

"My friends and I were outside playing in the snow and we saw two guys who had a sled and we went up to them and asked if we could borrow it and they said yes," Guatham said.

She and a group of about 10 of her friends took the sled to the hill next to Mercer Hall.

"We took turns going down the hill trying not to fall off of the drop-off at the end of the hill into the creek. We had a lot of fun. We kept throwing snow at each other and tackling each other. It was really crazy."

Many University of Mary Washington students are enjoying the snowy weather this season.

Junior Elliott Jones goes skiing with friends as often as he can at Massanutten Resort.

Massanutten, located only 10 minutes east of Harrisonburg—about an hour and 45 minutes from Fredericksburg, is popular with University of Mary Washington students.

"I really like the friendliness of the staff, plus they have really good trails," Jones said. "Massanutten has really good black diamond slopes."

Many students are choosing to go to Massanutten because of their "Monday Night Madness" ski and snowboarding rates.

From 5 p.m. until 10 p.m. on Monday nights, both ski lift tickets and equipment

rentals are only $12 each.

Wednesday and Friday nights are college nights at Massanutten. Lift tickets are $20 and rentals are $15 if you have a college ID.

Massanutten boasts 70 acres for skiing/snowboarding, with 14 lighted trails for night skiing.

Wintergreen Resort is also another ski resort that attracts many students.

Sophomore Matthew Hubbard has skied at Wintergreen Resort many times.

"There is something for everyone at Wintergreen, whatever level you are," Hubbard said. "I would prefer somewhere out west, but it is close and they are currently working on expanding the resort."

Hubbard also enjoys the snow tubing at Wintergreen.

"They have two separate tubing hills," he said. "They are pretty good. You get some awesome air."

Located in Wintergreen, the resort is a little over two hours from Fredericksburg. It boasts a new high-speed chair lift called 'The Highlands Express,' which reaches the top in less than four minutes, according to the resort's Web site.

Wintergreen also offers free beginner lessons with rentals, and 'The Plunge,' a 900-foot-long tubing park with ten lanes.

College student specials at Wintergreen are on Tuesdays and Thursdays. Lift tickets are $30 during the day and $20 at night.

While many students travel to ski resorts during the winter season, others may choose to enjoy a winter activity indoors.

without having to pay anything.

Freshman Erin Reyhan spent Wednesday, Jan. 19, snowboarding down a hill near the Alumni Executive Center on Hanover Street.

"I'm not from Virginia, so I don't really know where any resorts are yet," Reyhan said. "Plus I don't have a ride, so I decided to snowboard on campus. I love snowboarding. It's more unconventional and I like doing different things."

As the weather seems to get colder every day, many students are still excited about increased snow accumulation.

Freshman Leslie McGlothlin, who is from Florida, isn't used to seeing snowy weather.

"It's been really exciting. Even though it's hard adjusting to the fresh cold, I don't make my first snow angels with some of my new best friends," she said. "We also got to build a snowman on Saturday night that was only eight inches tall."

McGlothlin said she used a carrot for her leftover Chinese food, because a normal carrot would have been too big.

"My friends and I are just making a lot of really fun memories, and I'm looking forward to even more snow," she said.

The

Fredericksburg

Ice Park contains an indoor skating rink where students can partake in public skating sessions.

Located in uptown Central Park, the Fredericksburg Ice Park holds public skating sessions between 10 a.m. until 3 p.m. Mondays through Fridays, with an additional evening session from 7 p.m. to 10 p.m. on Fridays.

The Park also has scheduled weekend skate times. On a weekday, tickets cost $5, on weekends, $8 and rentals cost $2.

Even though there are many activities students can pay to participate in, many students are also taking advantage of the winter weather and enjoying themselves

[Welcome to Thefacebook]

Students Meet And Greet On College-Geared Web Site

By KATY HERSHBERGER
Assistant Scene Editor

Junior Mandy Gabriel was recently re-united with a friend that she has not seen in six years, thanks to Thefacebook.com.

"One of my old friends found me on Thefacebook.com and sent me a message," she said. "It was nice to hear from someone I haven't talked to in years."

Thefacebook.com describes itself as "an online directory that connects people through social networks at colleges and universities."

It is a virtual representation of traditional college Facebooks, like the New Student Record that University of Mary Washington students receive as freshmen.

"Everyone is doing it," said senior Vitto Amnathong, a member of Thefacebook.com.

Freshman Emma Kient enjoys being a member.

"My friends at other schools had it and really liked having it," she said. "It connects people, especially those you don't see much."

Thefacebook.com, which is not associated with the university, allows students to create a profile for themselves. In their profile, students can post a picture and contact information like e-mail address, screen name and home address.

There is also a place for personal information like favorite music, books, movies and quotes. Profiles also have a feature called "the wall," an open forum for friends to post comments for each other.

"My friends and I love the wall because we leave each other cryptic messages about inside jokes and stuff that no one else will understand," said freshman Nicole Cericie.

Users can send private messages and "poke" each other. Poking is like a virtual high-five, and according to Thefacebook.com staff, has no specific purpose.

Searching for people on Thefacebook.com, which has over one million total users—2,382 of those from the University of Mary

Washington—has become like an addiction for many students.

"All I do is waste time on there and not do my schoolwork," said junior Elizabeth Willson.

Cericie and her friends are trying to cut back on their use of Thefacebook.com.

"My roommates are really addicted to it, more so than me," she said. "They had to ban it for finals week."

Thefacebook.com allows students to create groups of people with similar interests, such as Mary Wash Young Democrats or Anti-Popped Collar Society. Students may also list the classes they are taking.

Users can list other users as their friends. In order to be someone's friend, both users must electronically confirm that they do, in fact, know each other.

"I like that you can see how you are connected to other people here at UMW through your friends," Cericie said. "I've realized that I didn't know some of my friends knew each other in other ways than through me, so it makes it easier to hang out in a big group."

To date, more than 300 colleges and universities are represented on Thefacebook.com.

Scott Hornick, a junior at Virginia Tech, is a member.

"A lot of my friends were talking about how addicting it is, so I checked it out and joined," he said. "It's a good way to meet people through friends or through your classes."

However, not all students see the benefits of Thefacebook.com. "I joined it because I'm an idiot—it's a complete and total waste of time and I haven't spent more than half an hour on it since I joined," freshman Marie Coates said.

Sophomore Scott Berry is an opponent of Thefacebook.com. "It seems like just a trendy way for morons to keep abreast of what their idiot friends are doing," he said.

Thefacebook.com phenomenon began as the branchchild of Mark Zuckerberg, a student at Harvard University. According to Chris

► See FACEBOOK, page 5

Dan Coo / Bullet

Sophomore Drew Murray searches for friends on Thefacebook.com. Many students spend countless hours confirming, inviting and poking their peers.

Thumbs Up... Thumbs Down...

To Black History month.

To black ice.

To Seacobeek food improving lately.

To the Ashlee Simpson Show.

Send your own thumbs to bullet@umw.edu

Student Teaches With Leeches

By ERIN ROURKE
Staff Writer

At 9 a.m. on a Saturday morning, while most college students are sleeping, University of Mary Washington sophomore Lindy McWhirt is already hard at work with her friends. Her leech friends, that is.

McWhirt works at Hugh Mercer Apothecary on Caroline Street in downtown Fredericksburg where she educates tourists about leeches and other aspects of colonial medicine.

During the many tours in a four-hour shift, she explains herbal remedies, amputations and takes leeches out of their bowls and displays them for the groups.

"It's not in my job requirement to touch them or play with them in any manner, that's just a perk," she says.

Colonial doctors used leeches to remove bad blood from sick patients, believing that it would cure illness. They also commonly thinned the blood after wintertime to prevent lethargy as the weather warmed. Although modern medicine has removed most of these procedures, some practices still use leeches today.

Since she first started working there three years ago, the 19-year-old Spotsylvania native has enjoyed working with the leeches. In fact, she chose to make an English presentation about medicinal leeches for her English 101 class.

For a presentation visual, she borrowed a leech from work, affectionately named him Rigatoni, and kept him in her dorm room for a week.

"He was a good guy, stayed in his jar. He bit me, that was kind of exciting," she said. "I freaked out and flipped him back in the jar."

Being informed about the creatures helps as well. By keeping them well-fed and making sure they stay on the palms of her hands, where the skin is tougher, there is little danger of the leeches actually latching on and sucking blood.

Despite the careful handling, some tourists still feel uneasy. Many get anxious as she goes to pull the leeches out of their bowls, even though the tourists never get close. Some react to the point of getting physically ill.

"We almost make it a points game," McWhirt said. "If you have a person pass out, a person have to leave the room, you get so many points. I've had people pass out, I've had people leave, I had one kid who almost threw up."

There are some tourists who enjoy the leech demonstration. Some show interest in buying them for themselves; others want to touch them.

"We had a woman who was very fond of them and just all she wanted to do was stroke the leech," McWhirt recalled.

Working at the historical site has brought McWhirt into contact with a wide variety of tourists from all over the world. Some are just curious, while others want to discuss and compare current medical practices to those of the colonial world.

Tourists can do some strange things when they encounter the employees at the Apothecary. Countless people peck in the window, try to wave at them and even want to take pictures of their shoes. Such requests are common, considering that the employees wear replicas of authentic colonial clothing.

"My favorite tourists of all time were the two Korean men with cameras who wanted to take me to dinner at Clubbore's afterward," McWhirt said with a laugh. "They thought I was so brave for touching the leech and they had to reward me with dinner. That was pretty cool. I didn't go, obviously. That would have been sketchy."

The average number of people that come through varies by season. Winter is the slowest season, while business peaks during the spring and summer.

School groups routinely show up, bringing up to 200 students in one day. These are her favorite groups.

"It's great to see the kids freak out," she said. "We do a lot of hands-on stuff with them."

McWhirt wanted a job to prepare for a future career.

"I actually got the job when I was looking into going in the field of history, public health, and so on. All through high school when I worked there I thought I was going to get into museum work."

Photo: News Bulletin

Sophomore Lindy McWhirt dresses in historical clothing for her job at the Hugh Mercer Apothecary Shop on Caroline Street downtown.

The apothecary manager offered her a job while she was applying to a live-in college program in Fredericksburg. When that job fell through, she came back to the apothecary.

"I went to college and I was like, 'Hey, remember me? I kind of like leeches.' They go, 'So she did.' McWhirt said.

Before she could leave, however, she had to memorize a five-page script outlining the tour. She also had to read several books and observe tours.

Her freshman choice focused a passion other than historic preservation and leeches. McWhirt is now a sociology major with a concentration in anthropology.

McWhirt has used her time to expand her studies while at work.

"I still go to classes for the people that come in and the mentality of the tourists is just conforming to me," she said. "So even though I kind of go to class, I'm doing a lot of kind of applies."

Groundhog Day 2005

Punxsutawney Phil delivered his annual winter prediction yesterday. The famous groundhog saw his shadow on Gobbler's Knob, determining that there will be another six weeks of wintry weather.

Students Confirm Facebook Is A Hit

◀ FACEBOOK, page 4

Hughes, co-founder of Thefacebook.com. Zuckerberg came up with the idea to have an interactive social networking database.

He commissioned four friends, including Hughes, to help with the project and in February 2004, Thefacebook.com was born.

"We wanted students to have control over what information they would provide to their peers—screen names, favorite movies, classes and friends," Hughes said.

"Instead of having just a college-issued facebook with terrible headshots taken at the beginning of your first year and uninteresting information about you. We thought we would provide something like that, but over which each user could have control."

In that vein, he said, Thefacebook.com is a Web site that is both a resource for information, communication and a means for recreation.

Only members of Thefacebook.com can search for other members. Users can only see information about users who go to their school, unless they are friends with someone from another college.

A user can also adjust their privacy settings so that people only see information that he wants them to see.

Despite these precautions, Cedric Rucker, dean of student life, is concerned about students' safety.

"With any online community, students need to be aware that it's a public forum," he said. "Be cautious of the type of information one shares, especially in an era of identity theft, where people are not as kind as they could be."

Hughes is sure that privacy is not a problem.

"We have had surprisingly few complaints about privacy issues, probably because Thefacebook.com is a secure site with a myriad of privacy options," he said. "We're confident that our members are intelligent enough not to give out any personal information that they want to be public. If any user does use the network inappropriately, we'll throw that person off the network. Additionally, any user can block another specific user from seeing her profile by going to her privacy options page."

Cerie is not at all concerned about privacy.

"I put up the information that I want people to be able to access," she said. "If I don't want people to know something, I don't put it on my profile."

Hornick is not worried about his privacy either.

"What's good about Thefacebook.com is that you can put as much or as little personal information as you want on it, so it's up to the person how much information they want to give out," he said. "If you give your screen name you shouldn't be shocked that someone instant messaged you. All you have to do is not post your personal information if you are worried about privacy."

Though Thefacebook.com has taken the campus by storm, Berry does not think the fad will last for long.

"It seems like it's just one of those phenomena that comes, spikes for awhile, and then settles into the background once people get bored with it," he said. "So my prediction is nobody will care in a month or two."

Send your Valentine's Day love to that special someone in your life.

Or write a message for your friends. Or send in a personal ad.

The Bullet will publish short messages in the Feb. 10 issue, free of charge.

Follow the examples to the right and send a message to the important people in your life.

E-mail your Valentine's Day messages to bullet@umw.edu or send by campus mail to The Bullet, Seacobeck Hall.

Hey baby,

I think you are cute.
Will you be my Valentine?
Yes ___ No ___ Maybe ___

Warm regards,
Your Secret Admirer

Single white female seeking nice boy for long walks on the beach and candlelit dinners. Good conversation skills a must. If you're looking for love, I'm your girl.

Happy Valentine's Day to all my best friends! We don't need girls in our lives to have a good time.

Hey baby,
Thanks for putting the light inside of my life. I wouldn't be what I am today without you.
XOXO,
Me

Film Festival Showcases Students' Creativity

By CAITLIN YOUNG
Staff Writer

Last year, the University of Mary Washington Student Government Association sponsored Mary Washington's first student film festival, "The Spectacle." This year, the SGA will showcase again the talents of student filmmakers. The second annual Student Film Festival (SFF) will take place on Friday, Feb. 4 in Dodd Auditorium.

Junior Elise Tobin, SGA Student Film Festival Committee Chair, heads the committee of volunteers who have organized the SFF. She was in charge of the committee last year as well and is looking forward to the second festival. She estimates that roughly 500 people attended the festival last year and she said she is hoping turnout will be just as good this time.

"The festival seemed pretty popular last year and I'm really excited about doing it again," Tobin said. "I hope people come out like they did last year."

This year's festival is largely similar to the first, with some changes. There are now two categories under which films can be submitted—films three to twelve minutes in length, or 60 seconds or under.

Students wishing to participate in the festival this year were required to submit an entry form declaring their intent to make a film by Nov. 30, 2004. According to Tobin, 25 to 30 forms were submitted. For the films themselves, participants were given a deadline of Jan. 17, 2005. According to Tobin, 10 films were submitted in the three to 12-minute category, and two in the 60 - seconds or under category.

"The caliber of the films this year is superior," Tobin said. "There are better stories, better editing and camera work, and a more competitive selection for the judges."

The judges Tobin mentions are a panel of three faculty members and two students, who will choose a first-prize winner in the shorter category and a first, second and third prize winner from among the longer films. Tobin said she is thankful for the time the judges have donated to the event.

The members of the SFF committee have been working hard to make sure that everything goes well the night of the festival. Junior Laura Ramsey, secretary and senator for SGA, has been taking care of cast and director relations for the event.

Her job has included working with the films' directors, answering any questions they had and keeping track of their information. Ramsey, along with Anna deSocio and Lesley Johnson, scene editor for the Bulletin, were in charge of constructing the "Wall of Fame," a display in the lobby of Dodd Auditorium that will include pictures of all the directors.

"I was on the committee last year [and] I wanted to do it again because I truly believe that 'The Spectacle' is the best event on campus," Ramsey said. "The committee is a ton of fun to work with and I love seeing what creative genius the directors can come up with."

Megan Martinez, sophomore and Senate telecommunications co-chair, has been in charge of publicity for the festival. Her duties include typing the programs for the event and having them printed, as well as coordinating the judging of the films. Martinez said she too is enthusiastic about her involvement in the event.

"I think that the Spectacle is an amazing event

"I think it's important for people who love making movies to have a forum."
--Elise Tobin

Lesley Johnson/Bulletin

Clockwise: A few of the celebrity presenters at last year's film festival. From left to right: Juniors Frank Puleo (as Paris Hilton) and Kirk Roberts (as Harry Potter); seniors Andrew Deci, Bulletin photography editor (as Anna Nicole Smith), Peter Kelly, Bulletin senior photographer (as Nick Lachey), and Byron Leeth (as Tom Cruise).

Above: Last year's Student Film Festival Committee at the afterparty.

and I love being involved with it," she said. "It targets every student on campus and it's one of those events that everyone can enjoy."

On the night of the festival, the area in front of Dodd Auditorium will be transformed into the exterior of a Hollywood awards show, complete with a red carpet and a limousine donated by V & K Limousine Service. There will be a live audio-visual feed from outside into the auditorium, so that attendees can watch the films' directors arriving.

Senior Jon Yonce will be the master of ceremonies for the event and door prizes will be given to members of the audience. Seven of the 10 films from the longer category will be shown, as well as both from the shorter category, adding up to approximately 80 minutes of film. Following the viewings, "celebrity" presenters will give out the awards to the winning filmmakers.

Tobin hopes the second film festival will be as successful as the first, and looks forward to continuing the event in future years.

"I became involved with this because I have a great interest in film and I think it's important for people who love making movies to have a forum," she said.

Second Annual Student Film Festival

Friday, Feb. 4
Doors open at 6 p.m.
Dodd Auditorium
Free admission

By MIRIAM OUHAMOU
Staff Writer

Film director Zhang Yimou has caused quite a stir in his native China. Yimou graduated from China's only film school, the Beijing Central Film Academy, departing from the traditional cinematic style of making propaganda films.

Overly critical of the communist regime, several of Yimou's films have been criticized, censored or banned altogether in the country. Internationally, however, his films have piqued the curiosity of many and won numerous accolades.

The upcoming Asian Film Festival, running from Feb. 2 through Feb. 5, will feature four of Yimou's most notable works: "The Story of Qiuju," "Raise the Red Lantern," "To Live" and "Hero."

The Asian Film Festival, sponsored by the Leidecker Center for Asian Studies, is in its second year. This year, the Film Festival's theme is the use and abuse of power; all four films explore the topic in some way. The power issue is being explored further in the Classics, Philosophy and Religion lecture class entitled "Mysterium Humanum: Uses and Abuses of Power."

"We kind of co-opted the Festival to fit the lecture themes," said Joseph Romero, assistant professor of classics and co-organizer of the event. "We hope to contribute to an ongoing discussion about how power works."

David Ambuel, associate professor of philosophy and the Leidecker chair of Asian Studies, hopes the Film Festival will raise greater interest in Asian studies.

Propaganda Films Use And Abuse Power

"It's an opportunity to see good films...and hopefully it will pique interest in Asian culture, history and language."

While the four films might seem different at first, closer inspection will reveal a link to the power theme. For example, the series' first film, "The Story of Qiuju," follows a peasant pursuing justice and her encounters with the Chinese bureaucracy. The next film, "Raise the Red Lantern," is about a 20-year-old college student who is forced to marry a wealthy aristocrat, becoming his fourth wife and arousing jealousy among the other wives. "To Live," which was banned in China, tells a parallel story of one couple's struggle for survival and the turbulent history of China. The last film in the series, "Hero," stars Jet Li as a warrior who prevents the emperor's assassination. Made in 2002, this film is the most nationalistic and friendliest to the Chinese government.

"By showing four of his films, you get a sense of depth rather than a scattering of four movies by four separate directors...and people get to meet a fantastic director," Romero said.

Asian Film Festival

Following movies shown in Chandler 102 at 5 p.m.
Feb. 2 -- "The Story of Qiuju"
Feb. 3 -- "Raise the Red Lantern"
Feb. 4 -- "To Live"
Following movie shown in Combs 139 at 2 p.m.
Feb. 5 -- "Hero"
Free Admission

New CDs This Week

Motley Crue; "Red, White, and Crue" Jason Moran; "Same Mother"
Johnny Mathis; "Isn't It Romantic: The Standards Album"
Ray Charles; "More Music from Ray"

All CD release dates were Feb. 1, 2005
All CD cover art courtesy of allmusic.com.

Top 3 Movies

Photos courtesy of imdb.com

1. "Hide and Seek"

2. "Are We There Yet?"

3. "Million Dollar Baby"

Why Should People Read The Bullet?

Andrew Deci/Bullet

"Because the photo department kicks ass."

—Katie Teller,
Junior & Editor In Chief

"It's the only publication on campus that tells you what's really going on."

—Stephanie Tait,
Sophomore &
News Editor

"Because sports is awesome."

—Dave Buschenfeldt,
Senior & Sports
Editor

"We work our asses off and get paid the big money. Oh, wait, we don't get paid at all."

—Corey Byers,
Junior & News Editor

"You mean, people don't read The Bullet?"

—Lesley Johnson,
Senior & Scene Editor

Jazz Emanates From Dodd Auditorium

By ZACH BOWMAN
Staff Writer

Where can students go to see live big band performances of Grammy winning songs by Natalie Cole and Santana, as well as Duke Ellington and Gershwin classics? Such a diverse show will be put on by the University of Mary Washington Jazz Ensemble directed by Doug Gately on Feb. 11 at 7:30 p.m. The music department sponsored event will be completely free of charge and, according to the director, will not be something to miss.

The 19-person ensemble is a full-complement big band including six brass, five saxophones, a full rhythm section and two vocalists. The group will be playing anywhere from 10 to 12 pieces spanning a full spectrum of musical influences. Planned highlights include renditions of Santana's "Smooth," Gershwin's "S Wonderful," and Duke Ellington's "I Got it Bad."

"That's the exciting thing about jazz," Gately, director of the jazz, flute, and clarinet ensembles, said. "It's very flexible."

Saxophonist Kelly Minton, a senior who has been in the Jazz Ensemble for four years, will be soloing in "Harlem Nocturne," written by Dick Rogers and Earle Hagan in 1940.

"It's grittier, not big band up tempo," Minton said. "It's a sleazy, nighttime seduction song."

Gately's favorite piece of the performance is a more contemporary tune, "Blues for Bela," written by Don Sebesky for Bela Bartok, a classical Hungarian composer who died in 1945. The piece borrows and improvises on Bartok's melodies.

"It's very progressive; it's not your typical tap-your-foot jazz tune. There are moments of complete improvisation by one or more players at the same time with a lot of percussion," Gately said.

Aside from the large ensemble's show, the concert will feature a number of small group performances as well.

The annual Jazz Ensemble concert is usually held in mid-March, but due to a high number of performances competing for time in Dodd Auditorium, Gately volunteered the Jazz Ensemble to be one of the earlier shows. The earlier date only allows for three rehearsals for the show, but the director is confident in the ensemble's ability.

"We'll be the ones to bite the bullet and go first, my guys can get ready. They'll be great. We can put [the concert] together in a very short period of time," Gately said.

Gately, a professional musician, has a long history with jazz. He came to the University of Mary Washington, then Mary Washington College, in 1999 after retiring from the U.S. Air Force Jazz Band.

"I always find any live performance exciting. Because it's jazz, there's much of the performance that's improvisational. [The Students] are not reading necessarily from the music, they're creating from their hearts and minds. It's always a fresh performance. I think that's exciting in and of itself," Gately said.

Also, students can look forward to the Jazz Ensemble in the University of Mary Washington Jazz Festival in early April. The Jazz Festival will be a completely different program with more complex pieces.

Jazz Ensemble

Friday, Feb. 11 at 7:30 p.m.
Dodd Auditorium
Free admission

Women of Color and Bond Present:

Annual Step Show & Afterparty

Saturday Feb. 5

Step Show: 7 p.m.—Dodd Auditorium

Students: $5 and Public: $7

Afterparty 9 p.m.—Underground

Free Admission

The Horoscopes

By KATIE TELLER
Editor in Chief

ARIES (MARCH 21 TO APRIL 19)

This month, you will excel in sports and other physical activities. Be sure to save some of your energy, though, because you will need it for an academically demanding month.

TAURUS (APRIL 20 TO MAY 20)

You're stubborn, but compromise never hurt anyone. Try putting your pride on the back burner, especially in romance matters. You'll be pleasantly surprised at what you can get when you let your ego take a backseat.

GEMINI (MAY 21 TO JUNE 21)

You are famous for your split personalities. It's time to get your act together. If you've been two-faced, it's time to start being true to your friends and family. You'll catch more flies with honey than with vinegar.

CANCER (JUNE 22 TO JULY 22)

Stop being such a crab! Your negative attitude is a turn-off to everyone, especially to members of the opposite sex. You don't want to be alone on the fourteenth, do you? Then shape up.

LEO (JULY 23 TO AUG. 22)

Winter is not normally your season, but cheer up! Good news is coming your way, and that's something to smile about. And when you're smiling, the whole world smiles with you. Keep that in mind.

VIRGO (AUG. 23 TO SEPT. 22)

If you want to get with that hot member of the opposite sex, you need to make yourself known. Maybe try a new look.

LIBRA (SEPT. 23 TO OCT. 22)

Get off the fence! Your inherent indecisiveness will be your downfall if you don't take a position on something. You will have to make an important decision about your future, and copping out won't help you out.

SCORPIO (OCT. 23 TO NOV. 21)

Hey sexy. You're looking good these days. Have you been working out? Your efforts are not going unnoticed—someone is watching you, and in a good way. The 21st of February may be your day for romance.

SAGITTARIUS (NOV. 22 TO DEC. 21)

You may be the archer of the zodiac, but this month Cupid hits you with one of his arrows. And don't even think about trying to resist it—nobody likes a commitment-phobic.

CAPRICORN (DEC. 22 TO JAN. 19)

You may want to gamble on the Super Bowl or college basketball, but watch your wallet. You may end up really happy if you win—but if you lose all your money, you'll be up the creek without a paddle.

AQUARIUS (JAN. 20 TO FEB. 18)

You may feel a little lonely this month. That's okay, and it's normal. Rely on your close friends and your family—they are there for you and love you. Remember that, and cheer up because things won't suck forever.

PISCES (FEB. 19 TO MARCH 20)

You've been really into yourself lately, but it's time to let other people into your life. Like the old adage says, there is no "I" in "team." Start listening to the old adages, and you'll find a lot of truth.

Have an event coming up?

Want coverage from The Bullet?

Let us know!

E-mail Lesley: ljohn5ag or Katy: khers1pj

News

Haley Amey/Bullet

The Fairfax House (left) and the Hamlet House (right) will not be torn down, despite rumors, because there is no place to house the employees who work there.

Destruction Of Houses A Rumor

By ADELE CHAPIN
Staff Writer

Contrary to rumor, Fairfax House and Hamlet House, two of six small structures owned by the University of Mary Washington, are not in danger of being replaced by newer buildings.

"There are no plans to tear down Fairfax or Hamlet. Interesting rumor, though," said Executive Vice President Richard Hurley. "Even if someone wanted to tear them down, we don't have any additional space into which we could move the employees who work in those houses."

In fact, these two buildings, which currently house University offices, have had thousands of dollars worth of remodeling.

"In the last two years, we have put probably $60,000 to $80,000 worth of improvements, mostly Fairfax, but also in the other houses," said John Wiltmuth, associate vice president of facilities services.

Wiltmuth has a possible explanation for the rumor, stating that facilities services looked into building on the site behind Westmoreland where Hamlet House and Fairfax House are located.

"We asked the question, 'If we took those buildings down, would that provide space for other building projects?' But we decided against it," he said.

Carter Hudgins, chair of the history department, had some memory of such a proposal.

"I have heard nothing about the demolition of either of those houses although I recall hearing that, once cleared, [that] that part of the campus would be a good location for a dorm or another academic building," Hudgins said.

Professor Gary Stanton, associate professor of historic preservation has also heard that the locations of Fairfax and Hamlet houses was discussed as a possible location for other building projects.

"I don't believe that the facilities services people would be unhappy to see them go, they represent buildings that do not conform to building code requirements for educational institutions," he said.

In April 2000, students of historic preservation

associate professor and chair Wendy Price compiled a history of Mary Washington College, including information on Hamlet House and Fairfax House.

"The issue of demolition was something that my students were concerned about in 2000, but I have not heard any recent discussion," Price said.

The University owns six houses on campus, Marye, Framar, Brent, Tyler, Fairfax, and Hamlet.

Their use over the years has been controversial.

In February 2003, two students wrote editorials protesting the college's decision to turn Marye House from a substance-free residence hall into the offices that are currently housed there today.

According to the developmental history of the college compiled by students in 2000, Hamlet House was acquired by the college in 1937, where it once served as student housing, then a center for campus psychological services, and then voice services, which processed campus phone bills.

Fairfax House once served as the college infirmary before the construction of Mercer Hall. In 1956, Fairfax became home for the dean of students. Later, the building was home to seven students and was considered an extension of Westmoreland residence hall. By 1970, Fairfax was remodeled and turned into offices.

Junior Debie Kim thinks that the houses are an important part of the atmosphere at the institution. "I think Fairfax and Hamlet House provide a quaint element to the campus. I would hate to see them go," she said.

The historic preservation students who created the April 2000 report were also concerned the houses remain fixture on campus.

The six houses, Framar, Brent, Marye, Hamlet, Tyler and Fairfax need to be maintained because they are an integral part of Mary Washington College history," the students wrote.

“

There are no plans to tear down Fairfax or Hamlet. Interesting rumor, though.

—Richard Hurley

”

Students Rate Professors On-Line

By LEAH TRIPLETT
Staff Writer

As spring classes began, some University of Mary Washington students rested knowing their course schedule was chosen based on smiley faces and chili peppers.

The Web site RateMyProfessors.com is a no-cost site where students from 4,358 colleges can rate 495,534 professors anonymously in categories such as "helpfulness," "clarity," "overall quality" and how interesting students find the instructor. Students can score professors using a range from one to five with one being the lowest favorable score and five being the highest favorable score. In addition to these categories, a professor can be rated as "hot," and given a chili pepper.

According to the Web site, UMW students have the opportunity to rate 296 professors at no cost with either a smiley face or a frown.

Increasingly, students planning class schedules prior to registration use the website in order to pick professor best suited for their needs.

According to RateMyProfessors.com, the site's purpose is to help students create the perfect schedule.

"We do not encourage or discourage the use of this site," said Susan Colbow, assistant registrar for information management at the University of Mary Washington. "We expect students to meet with their academic advisor to prepare a scheduling plan."

Judy Ginter, the registrar at the University of Mary Washington, emphasized this expectation.

"We encourage students to work with their advisors when choosing classes," Ginter said. "We think that students need to focus on their educational and professional goals when choosing courses."

RateMyProfessors.com justifies its existence as being for the students.

"We believe that students are the customers of professors—and we believe they absolutely have a right to voice their opinions," the Web

Other students use the ratings only to make a decision while registering. "I only use it as a last resort to decide between two teachers," Junior Sarah Robinson, a staff writer for the Bullet, said. "I chose the ones that were rated well."

All of the reviews posted on RateMyProfessors.com are anonymous and posted at no cost. The Web site states that the posts are "a listing of opinions and should be judged as such."

The inability to verify posts does not seem to inhibit students from believing the ratings.

"People are more truthful when they can be evaluation," said Jeffrey Edmunds, assistant professor in mathematics. "[The Web site] won't check too closely to see if the comment has any merit."

"As far as I know there is no real control to ensure that someone posting a rating has ever taken the course with the professor they are rating."

According to the Web site, all ratings are reviewed and especially hateful ones are deleted.

"Comments should be about teaching ability," RateMyProfessors.com states. "Every new rating is reviewed, and we reserve the right to delete comments or the entire rating."

Although Edmunds is rated well on RateMyProfessors.com, he expressed doubts as to the validity of the postings.

"Someone who chooses to go to the site and post a rating has probably had either a very positive or a very negative experience with that professor. Thus, the 'average rating' score they give is really meaningless to me."

According to RateMyProfessors.com, they receive both positive and negative feedback.

"We get a lot of e-mails from teachers telling us they like the site, and we've had some telling us how the site has helped them," the Web site states. "We also get some pretty hateful e-mails telling us how inappropriate the site is, and how they are going to shut us down."

Five Highest-Rated Professors		Five Lowest Rated Professors
Name	Overall Rating	Name	Overall Rating
Eric Lorentzen	5.0	Patricia Dean	1.6
Rod Wood	5.0	Katie Shaw	1.8
Dale Wright	5.0	Charles Sharpless	1.9
Jane Gatewood	5.0	Robert Ducharme	2.1
Art Vandalay	5.0	Werner Wieland	2.2

site states. "[The Web site is] a resource for helping you plan your class schedule."

Some students who utilize the Web site find the site and the ratings categories crucial in making registration decisions.

"[The Web site] is very helpful," freshman Chris Dudley said. "It worked for all my teachers last semester."

anonymous," Dudley said. "I would not take a professor with a bad rating if it is possible."

The bad ratings, however, could simply be out of spite or a practical joke, as there is no definitive way to prove the statements.

"So for instance, I could pull a prank on Dr. Mellinger by going to the Web site, registering as a student, and giving him a scathing

Viewpoints

No Christians Left Behind

By ERIN LEACH-KEMON
Staff Writer

According to Carol Morello, staff writer for The Washington Post, apprehensive parents in Staunton have expressed doubts as to the utilitarian effects of Bible study during the school day at their children's elementary school, McSwain Elementary.

Conveniently, a Baptist church exists just beyond the school's "jungle-gym," permitting parents the option of twice-a-week, hour long religious studies and worship.

Upholding the constitutionality of the program, permission slips are distributed at the beginning of each school year, allowing parents to withhold their child from advancing his or her knowledge and piety in the Christian faith. Four groups, each varying in grade level, are transported across the school grounds with the assistance of volunteers, namely parents and church members.

Initially introduced in 1914 by a school superintendent from Indiana, the concept of Bible study in the classroom is facing hardly a new debate.

Envision the following hypothetical scene: 15 second-graders, 15 coats, 15 scarves, 15 pairs of gloves, and 15 hats. Sudden revelations of bathroom necessity, hair-pulling and misplaced milk money. Ten minutes pass. A 100-foot trek across the ankle-deep, snow covered asphalt. Five minutes pass. Hyper chatter, arm wrestling, and the strained voice pleading silence for opening prayer. Eight minutes. Twenty-three minutes have passed.

Given another 20-minute attempt at departure, actual lesson plans meet a time constraint of barely 15 minutes since these schools allow one hour for these weekly programs. Perhaps, next week we will see rise to a circulation of petitions insisting upon extended time periods, justified in the name of God.

Certainly, the Bible study programs are not required, yet parents who choose to opt out of the offer find themselves in a paralyzing situation.

Claiming that the majority (80-85 percent) of the class attends these functions, teachers consider it a burden to repeat lesson plans for absent students, therefore twice a week an hour of class time is dedicated to "busy work" for those who are left behind.

School systems are grappling with the concern of Standards of Learning test scores, for which they are extending school years, yet administrators willingly concur with two hours of religious devotion a week. Opponents of class time Bible study suggested an alternative of after-school sessions; however, parents ignored this compromise, expressing scheduling conflicts in regards to their work hours.

Parental complaints extend above the lack of instruction time resulting and broach the subject of discrimination from other students and teachers.

Countering the argument of the psychological effects on elementary school students whose parents chose not to involve their children in the program, the irresolute generalization was made that "they [third-graders at McSwain] said they never heard anybody say anything mean to the students who do not attend."

Aside from the wavering validity of an 8-year-old's observations, one must recognize the immediate inner conflict created for a young child when confronted with the concept that he or she is receiving alternate treatment from peers.

How does a parent explain to a child that he cannot receive the same colorful pencils and appealing candy as his classmates on the premise that he is Jewish?

In the pre-teen stage of heightened insecurity, the average elementary school student will struggle with the disheartening concept of rejection. Abstract notions, such as one's religious beliefs are hardly developed at the age of 8, however the desire to experience acceptance from peers is thriving.

Children attempting to overcome or hide their own insecurities by harassing and ostracizing other children exist in most schools. Should adults contribute to this conflict by designing additional systems of exclusion?

Furthermore, if schools are promoting a "nondenominational setting where the Bible is the only textbook" (statement made in the mission statement for the Public School Bible Study Outreach Ministries) where are the programs highlighting the good word provided by the Koran, Torah, Bhagavad-Gita or the four Vedas?

Proponents of this program wrap the untouchable blanket of the First Amendment around themselves, declaring that they may entertain religious freedom indefinitely.

Although, how can these programs be deemed an upholding of our rights when the only diversity in religious choice is Episcopalian, Methodist, Baptist or Catholic?

Erin Leach-Kemon is a freshman.

Student Takes Action For Better Health

This letter was written in response to "Mental Health Crisis Hits University" (Jan. 20, 2005, The Bulletin.)

Dear Editor:

I just wanted to let The Bulletin know that things are being done with regards to students' mental health on campus.

I met with several deans as well as Dr. Wagar and Dr. Miriam Liss to discuss that survey that was just released and also the study I conducted on a sample of 200 Mary Washington students and the high rates of dangerous behavior as well as mental health issues.

In response to all of that, Dr. Wagar and myself have been working to find new ways of reaching students. So far I am spearheading a Self-Injury Awareness Week that will occur in March.

More importantly, I am bringing a chapter of Active Minds (activemindsconcampus.org) to the university.

Active Minds is a non-profit organization and provides chapters of student-run groups that promote mental health awareness, education and advocacy on university campuses.

The group uses peer outreach to increase awareness of mental health issues and symptoms, as well as provide information about resources and encourages students to seek help. We hope to reach the entire campus through educational campaigns and events such as panel discussions, movie screenings and benefit runs.

I just wanted to let students know that something is being done and we hope we can make a difference.

Erin Polk is a junior.

Classifieds

SPRING BREAK 2005

Travel with STS, America's #1 Student Tour Operator to Jamaica, Cancun, Acapulco, Bahamas and Florida. NOW HIRING ON-CAMPUS REPS. Call for group discounts. Info/Reservations 1-800-648-4849. www.ststravel.com.

SPRING BREAK

Spring Break Bahamas Celebrity Party Cruise! 5 Days $299! Includes Meals, Parties! Cancun, Acapulco, Nassau, Jamaica From $459! Panama City & Daytona $159! www.SpringBreakTravel.com <<http://www.springbreaktravel.com/>> 1-800-678-6386.

Skydiving

SKYDIVE! one day first Tandem jumps from 2 1/2 miles up! 22 jumper aircraft. Gift Certificates! UMW Student Discounts! www.skydiverorange.com (877)DIVESKY.

Meet People & Share Music

Meet people, share music www.gorillapop.com. Free basic membership.

LIFEGUARDS/POOL MANAGERS NEEDED

Now hiring for summer 2005 NoVa areas! Competitive Pay! Call now or visit website! www.premier411.com. 1-877-SEE-POOL.

New Options For Athletes

By BREVIN BALFREY-BOYD
Guest Columnist

The University has grown quite a bit from when I graduated in 2003 with a revamped Alumni Center and the indoor tennis complex, and it is growing still with the imminent parking garage behind Goolrick.

While these are exciting changes on campus, one downside to this growth felt by University athletics, club sports, intramurals and any students just wanting to play pick-up games in general is the phenomenon of disappearing field space on campus.

One sensible substitution for field space that is especially pertinent given the arctic temperatures is a new indoor sports complex, the Fred Field House, which is opening this month on State Route 2, behind the Shannon Airport.

The Field House is climate-controlled, well-lit, and boasts two soft, grass-like fields and a fully-stocked concession stand.

As the assistant manager there, I am relaying this information not only out of the benevolence in my heart, but because I hope that Mary Washington students will take advantage of our many services. We offer soccer, field hockey, ultimate frisbee, dodgeball, flag football, volleyball and lacrosse leagues starting this February, so one can register as a team or as an individual. Furthermore, we are available to campus sports teams as a practice/game space for lease.

Athletics, clubs, intramurals, please come in out of the cold and enjoy our facility, which is just six minutes from campus. And please don't forget about our outdoor field space, which will be available for lease this spring, and beyond.

Brevin Balfrey-Boyd graduated in 2003.

Graphic by Christin Connors

News

Haley Amey-Bullitt

The Fairfax House (left) and the Hamlet House (right) will not be torn down, despite rumors, because there is no place to house the employees who work there.

Destruction Of Houses A Rumor

By ADELE CHAPIN
Staff Writer

Contrary to rumor, Fairfax House and Hamlet House, two of six small structures owned by the University of Mary Washington, are not in danger of being replaced by newer buildings.

"There are no plans to tear down Fairfax or Hamlet. Interesting rumor, though," said Executive Vice President Richard Hurley. "Even if someone wanted to tear them down, we don't have any additional space into which we could move the employees who work in those houses."

In fact, these two buildings, which currently house University offices, have had thousands of dollars worth of remodeling.

"In the last two years, we have put probably $60,000 to $80,000 worth of improvements, mostly Fairfax, but also in the other houses," said John Wiltenmuth, associate vice president of facilities services.

Wiltenmuth has a possible explanation for the rumor, stating that facilities services looked into building on the site behind Westmoreland where Hamlet House and Fairfax House are located.

"We asked the question, 'If we took those buildings down, would that provide space for other building projects?' But we decided against it," he said.

Carter Hudgins, chair of the history department, had some memory of such a proposal.

"I have heard nothing about the demolition of either of those houses although I recall hearing that, once cleared, [that] that part of the campus would be a good location for a dorm or another academic building," Hudgins said.

Professor Gary Stanton, associate professor of historic preservation has also heard that the locations of Fairfax and Hamlet houses was discussed as a possible location for other building projects.

"I don't believe that the facilities services people would be unhappy to see them go, they represent buildings that do not conform to building code requirements for educational institutions," he said.

In April 2000, students of historic preservation

associate professor and chair Wendy Price compiled a history of Mary Washington College, including information on Hamlet House and Fairfax House.

"The issue of demolition was something that my students were concerned about in 2000, but I have not heard any recent discussion," Price said. The University owns six houses on campus, Marye, Framar, Brent, Tyler, Fairfax, and Hamlet.

Their use over the years has been controversial.

In February 2003, two students wrote editorials protesting the college's decision to turn Marye House from a substance-free residence hall into the offices that are currently housed there today.

According to the developmental history of the college compiled by students in 2000, Hamlet House was acquired by the college in 1937, where it once served as student housing, then a center for campus psychological services, and then voice services, which processed campus phone bills.

Fairfax House once served as the college infirmary before the construction of Mercer Hall. In 1956, Fairfax became home for the dean of students. Later, the building was home to seven students and was considered an extension of Westmoreland residence hall. By 1970, Fairfax was remodeled and turned into offices.

Junior Debie Kim thinks that the houses are an important part of the atmosphere at the institution. "I think Fairfax and Hamlet House provide a quaint element to the campus. I would hate to see them go," she said.

The historic preservation students who created the April 2000 report were also concerned the houses remain fixture on campus.

"The six houses, Framar, Brent, Marye, Hamlet, Tyler and Fairfax need to be maintained because they are an integral part of Mary Washington College history," the students wrote.

“
There are no plans to tear down Fairfax or Hamlet. Interesting
rumor, though.
—Richard Hurley

”

Students Rate Professors On-Line

By LEAH TRIPLETT
Staff Writer

As spring classes began, some University of Mary Washington students rested knowing their course schedule was chosen based on smiley faces and chili peppers.

The Web site RateMyProfessors.com is a no-cost site where students from 4,358 colleges can rate 495,534 professors anonymously in categories such as "helpfulness," "clarity," "overall quality" and how interesting students find the instructor. Students can score professors using a range from one to five with one being the lowest favorable score and five being the highest favorable score. In addition to these categories, a professor can be rated as "hot," and given a chili pepper.

According to the Web site, UMW students have the opportunity to rate 296 professors at no cost with either a smiley face or a frown.

Increasingly, students planning class schedules prior to registration use the website in order to pick professor best suited for their needs.

According to RateMyProfessors.com, the site's purpose is to help students create the perfect schedule.

"We do not encourage or discourage the use of this site," said Susan Colbow, assistant registrar for information management at the University of Mary Washington. "We expect students to meet with their academic advisor to prepare a scheduling plan."

Judy Ginter, the registrar at the University of Mary Washington, emphasized this expectation.

"We encourage students to work with their advisors when choosing classes," Ginter said. "We think that students need to focus on their educational and professional goals when choosing courses."

RateMyProfessors.com justifies its existence as being for the students.

"We believe that students are the customers of professors—and we believe they absolutely have a right to voice their opinions," the Web

Other students use the ratings only to make a decision while registering. "I only use it as a last resort to decide between two teachers," junior Sarah Robinson, a staff writer for the Bulletin, said. "I chose the ones that were rated well."

All of the reviews posted on RateMyProfessors.com are anonymous and posted at no cost. The Web site states that the posts are "a listing of opinions and should be judged as such."

The inability to verify posts does not seem to inhibit students from believing the ratings.

"People are more truthful when they can be

evaluation," said Jeffrey Edmunds, assistant professor in mathematics. "[The Web site] won't check too closely to see if the comment has any merit."

"As far as I know there is no real control to ensure that someone posting a rating has ever taken the course with the professor they are rating."

According to the Web site, all ratings are reviewed and especially hateful ones are deleted.

"Comments should be about teaching ability," RateMyProfessor.com states. "Every new rating is reviewed, and we reserve the right to delete comments or the entire rating."

Although Edmunds is rated well on RateMyProfessor.com, he expressed doubts as to the validity of the postings.

"Someone who chooses to go to the site and post a rating has probably had either a very positive or a very negative experience with that professor. Thus, the 'average rating' score they give is really meaningless to me."

According to RateMyProfessors.com, they receive both positive and negative feedback.

"We get a lot of e-mails from teachers telling us they like the site, and we've had some telling us how the site has helped them," the Web site states. "We also get some pretty hateful e-mails telling us how inappropriate the site is, and how they are going to shut us down."

Five Highest-Rated Professors		Five Lowest-Rated Professors
Name	Overall Rating	Name	Overall Rating
Eric Lorentzen	5.0	Patricia Dean	1.6
Rod Wood	5.0	Katie Shaw	1.8
Dale Wright	5.0	Charles Sharpless	1.9
Jane Gatewood	5.0	Robert Ducharme	2.1
Art Vandalay	5.0	Werner Wieland	2.2

site states. "[The Web site is] a resource for helping you plan your class schedule."

Some students who utilize the Web site find the site and the ratings categories crucial in making registration decisions.

"[The Web site] is very helpful," freshman Chris Dudley said. "It worked for all my teachers last semester."

anonymous," Dudley said. "I would not take a professor with a bad rating if it is possible."

The bad ratings, however, could simply be out of spite or a practical joke, as there is no definitive way to prove the statements.

"So for instance, I could pull a prank on Dr. Mellinger by going to the Web site, registering as a student, and giving him a scathing

Viewpoints

No Christians Left Behind

By ERIN LEACH-KEMON
Staff Writer

According to Carol Morello, staff writer for The Washington Post, apprehensive parents in Staunton have expressed doubts as to the utilitarian effects of Bible study during the school day at their children's elementary school, McSwain Elementary.

Conveniently, a Baptist church exists just beyond the school's "jungle-gym," permitting parents the option of twice-a-week, hour long religious studies and worship.

Upholding the constitutionality of the program, permission slips are distributed at the beginning of each school year, allowing parents to withhold their child from advancing his or her knowledge and piety in the Christian faith. Four groups, each varying in grade level, are transported across the school grounds with the assistance of volunteers, namely parents and church members.

Initially introduced in 1914 by a school superintendent from Indiana, the concept of Bible study in the classroom is facing hardly a new debate.

Envision the following hypothetical scene: 15 second-graders, 15 coats, 15 scarves, 15 pairs of gloves, and 15 hats. Sudden revelations of bathroom necessity, hair-pulling and misplaced milk money. Ten minutes pass. A 100-foot trek across the ankle-deep, snow covered asphalt. Five minutes pass. Hyper chatter, arm wrestling, and the strained voice pleading silence for opening prayer. Eight minutes. Twenty-three minutes have passed.

Given another 20-minute attempt at departure, actual lesson plans meet a time constraint of barely 15 minutes since these schools allow one hour for these weekly programs. Perhaps, next week we will see rise to a circulation of petitions insisting upon extended time periods, justified in the name of God.

Certainly, the Bible study programs are not required, yet parents who choose to opt out of the offer find themselves in a paralyzing situation.

Claiming that the majority (80-85 percent) of the class attends these functions, teachers consider it a burden to repeat lesson plans for absent students, therefore twice a week an hour of class time is dedicated to "busy work" for those who are left behind.

School systems are grappling with the concern of Standards of Learning test scores, for which they are extending school years, yet administrators willingly concur with two hours of religious devotion a week. Opponents of class time Bible study suggested an alternative of after-school sessions; however, parents ignored this compromise, expressing scheduling conflicts in regards to their work hours.

Parental complaints extend above the lack of instruction time resulting and broach the subject of discrimination from other students and teachers.

Countering the argument of the psychological effects on elementary school students whose parents chose not to involve their children in the program, the irrelevant generalization was made that "they [third-graders at McSwain] said they never heard anybody say anything mean to the students who do not attend."

Aside from the wavering validity of an 8-year-old's observations, one must recognize the immediate inner conflict created for a young child when confronted with the concept that he or she is receiving alternate treatment from peers.

How does a parent explain to a child that he cannot receive the same colorful pencils and appealing candy as his classmates on the premise that he is Jewish?

In the pre-teen stage of heightened

insecurity, the average elementary school student will struggle with the disheartening concept of rejection. Abstract notions, such as one's religious beliefs are hardly developed at the age of 8, however the desire to experience acceptance from peers is thriving.

Children attempting to overcome or hide their own insecurities by harassing and ostracizing other children exist in most schools. Should adults contribute to this conflict by designing additional systems of exclusion?

Furthermore, if schools are promoting a "nondenominational setting where the Bible is the only textbook" (statement made in the mission statement for the Public School Bible Study Outreach Ministries) where are the programs highlighting the good word provided by the Koran, Torah, Bhagavad-Gita or the four Vedas?

Proponents of this program wrap the untouchable blanket of the First Amendment around themselves, declaring that they may entertain religious freedom indefinitely.

Although, how can these programs be deemed an upholding of our rights when the only diversity in religious choice is Episcopalian, Methodist, Baptist or Catholic?

Erin Leach-Kemon is a freshman.

Student Takes Action For Better Health

This letter was written in response to "Mental Health Crisis Hits University" (Jan. 20, 2005, The Bulletin.)

Dear Editor:

I just wanted to let The Bulletin know that things are being done with regards to students' mental health on campus.

I met with several deans as well as Dr. Wagar and Dr. Miriam Liss to discuss that survey that was just released and also the study I conducted on a sample of 200 Mary Washington students and the high rates of dangerous behavior as well as mental health issues.

In response to all of that, Dr. Wagar and myself have been working to find new ways of reaching students. So far I am spearheading a Self-Injury Awareness Week that will occur in March.

More importantly, I am bringing a chapter of Active Minds (activemindsconcampus.org) to the university.

Active Minds is a non-profit organization and provides chapters of student-run groups that promote mental health awareness, education and advocacy on university campuses.

The group uses peer outreach to increase awareness of mental health issues and symptoms, as well as provide information about resources and encourages students to seek help. We hope to reach the entire campus through educational campaigns and events such as panel discussions, movie screenings and benefit runs.

I just wanted to let students know that something is being done and we hope we can make a difference.

Erin Polk is a junior.

Classifieds

SPRING BREAK 2005

Travel with STS, America's #1 Student Tour Operator to Jamaica, Cancun, Acapulco, Bahamas and Florida. NOW HIRING ON-CAMPUS REPS. Call for group discounts. Info/Reservations 1-800-648-4849. www.ststravel.com.

SPRING BREAK

Spring Break Bahamas Celebrity Party Cruise! 5 Days $299! Includes Meals, Parties! Cancun, Acapulco, Nassau, Jamaica From $459! Panama City & Daytona $159! www.SpringBreakTravel.com <<http://www.springbreaktravel.com>> 1-800-678-6386.

Skydiving

SKYDIVE! one day first Tandem jumps from 2 1/2 miles up! 22 jumper aircraft. Gift Certificates! UMW Student Discounts! www.skydiveorange.com (877)DIVESKY.

Meet People & Share Music

Meet people, share music www.gorillapop.com. Free basic membership.

LIFEGUARDS/POOL MANAGERS NEEDED

Now hiring for summer 2005 NoVa areas! Competitive Pay! Call now or visit website! www.premier411.com. 1-877-SEE-POOL.

New Options For Athletes

By BREVIN Balfrey-BOYD
Guest Columnist

The University has grown quite a bit from when I graduated in 2003 with a revamped Alumni Center and the indoor tennis complex, and it is growing still with the imminent parking garage behind Goolrick.

While these are exciting changes on campus, one downside to this growth felt by University athletics, club sports, intramurals and any students just wanting to play pick-up games in general is the phenomenon of disappearing field space on campus.

One sensible substitution for field space that is especially pertinent given the arctic temperatures is a new indoor sports complex, the Fred Field House, which is opening this month on State Route 2, behind the Shannon Airport.

The Field House is climate-controlled, well-lighted, and boasts two soft, grass-like fields and a fully-stocked concession stand.

As the assistant manager there, I am relaying this information not only out of the benevolence in my heart, but because I hope that Mary Washington students will take advantage of our many services. We offer soccer, field hockey, ultimate frisbee, dodgeball, flag football, volleyball and lacrosse leagues starting this February, so one can register as a team or as an individual. Furthermore, we are available to campus sports teams as a practice/game space for lease.

Athletics, clubs, intramurals, please come in out of the cold and enjoy our facility, which is just minutes from campus. And please don't forget about our outdoor field space, which will be available for lease this spring, and beyond.

Brevin Balfrey-Boyd graduated in 2003.

Graphic by Christin Connors

PRESENTS:

STARVING STUDENT NIGHT

TAKE A STUDY BREAK AND ENJOY

½ Price Pool

Cheap Burgers

30 Cent Wings

Drink Specials

Video Game Tournament

STARTS AT 7:00 PM

EVERY WEDNESDAY NIGHT

Join Us Tuesday, February 8th for our
MARDI GRAS PARTY!
www.umwdining.com

Upcoming Events @ Seacobeck

Black History Month Dinner—Today! Feb. 3

Premium Night—Feb. 10

Valentine's Day Dinner—Feb. 14

Red Hot Chef—Feb. 15

Peanut Butter Feast—Feb. 16

Employment Opportunities

All positions available for evenings and weekends at Seacobeck

Eagle's Nest needs afternoon cashiers and night and weekend

servers, cashiers,
and utility workers.

Eagle's Nest Meal Deals: 2/7–2/13

Lunch Specials: $1.75

Deli: 1/2 sandwich, soup, fountain drinkMesa Jake's: 2 burritos, piece of whole fruit, fountain drink

Dinner Specials: $6.20

Deli: a 6 in. sub,
fountain drinkMesa Jake's: taco salad, piece of whole fruit, fountain drinkOriginal Grill: chicken patty sandwich, chips, fountain drinkPete's Area: slice of pizza, side salad, fountain drinkOriginal Grill: chicken nuggets, fries, fountain drinkPete's Area: calzone,
fountain drink

UNIVERSITY OF MARY WASHINGTON

Dining Services

Scion xB By Rudy, Police Photographer

5c10n-xb
POLICE DEPT.5c10n.com
Out On Bail: 02-01-04

In my line of work, I always remember the originals... Rudy.

Scion xB

Scion xA

Locate your nearest

Scion dealer at

scion.com or call 866-70-SCION.

What moves you
Scion moves.

xB pricing starts at $14,165* well equipped, including A/C, Pioneer AM/FM/CD system, power windows, door locks, mirrors, chrome exhaust tip, anti-lock brakes and vehicle stability control, and choice of 3 wheel cover options. Vehicle price as shown is $16,040. *MSRP includes delivery, processing, and handling fee. Excludes taxes, title, license, and optional equipment. Actual dealer price may vary. TRD USA, Inc. (Toyota Racing Development), an aftermarket performance parts company, markets a line of parts through some Scion dealers. These aftermarket parts are not Genuine Scion parts, and cannot be utilized for Scion warranty replacement. TRD parts are warranted by TRD, not Scion. Note that certain aftermarket equipment may not be street legal in all states and may impact your vehicle's performance or safety. © 2004, Scion and the Scion logo are trademarks of Toyota Motor Corporation and Toyota is a registered trademark of Toyota Motor Corporation. For more information, call 866-70-SCION (866-707-2466) or visit scion.com.

Rugby Aims For Santa Cruz

Women Hope To Win Division II National Championship

By ALICIA SOVART
Special To The Bulletin

On Monday, Jan. 10, most University of Mary Washington students were waiting in lines to buy books or staring at their computers trying to add that one important class. Not all UMW students had their minds solely on academics, however. That day, the Mary Washington women's rugby team was out on the pitch starting their spring conditioning in hopes of reaching the Division II nationals in Santa Cruz, Ca.

This Saturday at noon, the women's team will be kicking off their spring season with a double-header against Longwood University and Elon University of North Carolina.

Despite cold weather and snow, the women's team has not canceled a single practice since the beginning of spring semester.

"We show up in 20 degrees," said club president Catherine Easterling. "We have been out at the pitch for the last three weeks, running in the snow and slush and we run on the shell track when the pitch is too messy."

Vice president and Virginia Rugby Union (VRU) All-Star Andrea Wyatt added, "I think our greatest asset is our determination this year, and the fact that we still know how to have fun together. The mix between being serious and having fun makes us unique and successful."

Last year, the girls traveled to the flat, windy plains of Bowling Green, Ohio to compete for the National Championship. Coming into the Elite 8 seeded third, the club felt they had a good chance to make it to the finals at Stanford University. However, after beating the University of Central Florida 12-0, they faced number seven Providence College and lost 25-0.

A third place finish in nationals would not have been so disappointing had Temple University not beaten Providence 17-7 in the finals. Temple is UMW's rival in the Mid-Atlantic Rugby Football Union (MARFU). Last year, UMW beat Temple 7-5 at Severn River, Md. in the rain and mud to get the number one MARFU seed.

"I think our advantage right now is the memory that so many people took home last year from the playoffs," said 14-year volunteer coach Kris Kabza.

"To beat Temple, to play so well in nationals, and to find out that Temple won the national championship, I think that memory alone will be the drive for this semester."

In response to last spring season, the team is taking advantage of their momentum and putting in a lot of training time.

"We have been spending more time this season on fitness, endurance, and speed, which is a change from all other years," said senior VRU All-Star Katie Miller. "I think it will help us be better prepared for our games mentally, and will definitely work towards our advantage during our matches."

Not only have the girls begun practice early, but they also have scheduled a challenging set of matches for the weeks leading up to the MARFU tournament.

Courtesy Erin Ridout

Sophomore Katie Wilson carries the ball up the field while several University of Richmond players close in for the tackle.

"I am looking forward to the number of matches we are going to have," Kabza said. "I think it will develop the team at all levels."

Easterling agrees.

"It is going to be a long semester," she said. "We have an intense schedule. We will be up against Division I teams, and we will be playing in several tournaments. I think this is what we need."

The team knows there is a tough road ahead of them, but they are obviously willing to put forth the effort to achieve their goals. While their ultimate goal is to make it once again to the Elite 8 at nationals, many are concentrating on the immediate future.

Match-secretary and VRU All-Star Erin Ridout said, "I am trying to focus on [The College of New Jersey] first, and I am hoping the way it will work out is that we will play Temple for first and second of MARFU."

UMW will be hosting TCNJ in the quarterfinals of the MARFU tournament on Mar. 26. The outcome of that match will determine if UMW has a rematch against Temple. Regardless of placement, UMW will go on to the Elite 8 if they make it to the MARFU finals.

Although it would be nice just to make it to California, Wyatt "will not be satisfied until we beat [Temple] in nationals."

When asked about the possible rematch against Temple, Miller said, "If they beat us fairly, I won't be disappointed. If they beat us, then they obviously are a good team because, let's face it, we're good and it takes a lot to beat Mary Wash!"

THE BUSCH REPORT: The Orioles Will Never Learn

Dave Buschenfeldt

I think I'll take a week off from talking about the Patriots. There will be plenty of time for that after the Super Bowl this Sunday. But I will say that Freddie Mitchell's comments about Rodney Harrison and the New England secondary probably weren't the smartest things to say. When you only caught 22 passes during the regular season, you don't have any business talking about a man who has been a premiere safety in the NFL for 11 seasons.

Now here are some random thoughts for the week:

► The Baltimore Orioles just never learn. Why do they think bringing in power hitters will make them a championship contender? If the Red Sox of the past two seasons have taught us anything, it's that pitching wins championships. The 2003 Red Sox had one of the best offenses in baseball history and they still lost to the Yankees in the ALCS. They brought in veteran right-hander Curt Schilling in the offseason and he helped them win their first World Series championship in 86 years. Sammy Sosa might hit a few home runs and put a few more fans in the seats, but it is very unlikely that his presence in the lineup will bring the Orioles any closer to the Yankees and Red Sox in the AL East standings.

► Kudos to Illinois and Boston College, the two remaining undefeated teams in Division I men's college basketball. Illinois dominated Michigan State on Tuesday night to improve to 22-0, and now it looks like they might finish the regular season without a loss. Boston College has set a school record by starting the year 19-0. They are definitely the surprise team of the season. If anyone says they thought that BC would be undefeated in February, they are lying.

► If Emmitt Smith does indeed retire this week, it will be the end of an amazing NFL career. Football fans have been privileged to watch one of the greatest running backs of all time over the last 15 seasons. Smith holds the record for career rushes (4,409), career rushing yards (18,355), career rushing touchdowns (164), and career 100-yard rushing games (78). It's nice that he is going out on his own terms after two seasons with Arizona instead of being forced out by the Cowboys.

► Who would want to take the Los Angeles Lakers coaching job right now? After Rudy Tomjanovich resigned halfway through the season on Wednesday, LA is without a coach for the second time in seven months. There is talk of Phil Jackson returning to take over the team, but why he would want to come back after Kobe Bryant ran both him and Shaquille O'Neal out of town at the end of last season is beyond me.

► Thank you to whoever decided to have Paul McCartney perform at halftime of the Super Bowl. He will be much better than Janet Jackson.

Eagles Swim To Victory

By STEPHANIE POTTER
Staff Writer

The University of Mary Washington women's swim team dominated opponents Marymount and Randolph-Macon this weekend, winning the meets 124-66 and 116-80, respectively. The men's team also came out victorious on Friday against Marymount, winning their meet by a score of 109-74. The men only participated in time trials during the Randolph-Macon meet, however.

"I think we're swimming very well this season, I'm very proud of the team," coach Matt Kinney said. "We have a lot of very good swimmers this year. It's tough to name just one."

The women won every race in Friday's meet, with eight different swimmers coming in first place. Amy Carlson won the 100 butterfly with a time of 2:03.44, Brittany Valint won the 100 freestyle with a time of 55.44, and Susie Duke won the 100 backstroke in 1:02.22. Kathryn Anderson won the 1000 freestyle with a time of 11:05.78 and Patricia Dilger was victorious in both the 200 individual medley (2:15.00) and the 100 breaststroke (1:09.86). The Eagles also won the 200 medley relay (1:52.75) and the 200 freestyle relay (1:40.22).

As for the men, winners in Friday's Marymount meet include Brian Craddock in the 1000 (10:21.88), James Thomas in the 50 freestyle (22.28), Kevin Douglas in the 100 backstroke (57.02), and team wins in the 200 medley relay (1:40.94) and the 200 free relay (1:29.71).

In Saturday's meet, seven women helped

drive the team to victory, including Abby Koch in the 1000 freestyle with a time of 11:08.16, Ally Kight in the 200 freestyle with a time of 2:02.59, and Amy Carlson in the 50 freestyle with a time of 25.63. Lorena de la Garza won the 200 fly (2:09.46), Maureen Greenlee won the 100 freestyle (54.45), and Patricia Dilger won the 200 breaststroke (2:29.41). The team also won both relays.

Sophomore Maureen Greenlee turned in outstanding performances in both meets, earning an NCAA provisional cut and breaking her own Capital Athletic Conference record with a time of 24.31 in the 50 freestyle on Friday.

"[It is] fabulous," Greenlee said of her record-breaking performance. "Best times in the 50 freestyle don't come often. Everything has to go perfectly in your race."

The women's team will be training hard for the CAC Championships, which will be held here at UMW on Friday, Feb. 18. Greenlee is optimistic about the team's chances.

"We've trained so well this year, and the sprint events should be really fast," she said. "We have so many talented freshmen freestylers."

Sophomore Amy Carlson and senior Kevin Douglas agree, calling the team "very strong in the water" and attributing their success to hard work and dedication.

"Winning heats is nice, but I'm more interested in improving times," said Carlson, who earned first place in both meets. "Everyone will be going much faster at conferences."

The Eagles' last regular season meet will be Saturday, Feb. 5, against Goucher College at 1 p.m. in Goolrick natatorium.

Men Lack Inside Presence

◀ BBALL, page 12

stroked a 3-pointer to give the Eagles their first lead of the game at 40-39 with 7:41 to play.

Catholic built their lead back to five before a 3-pointer from Galinat made the score 45-43. Catholic answered with a layup, but Fitzgerald came down and stuck another three to pull the Eagles to within one at 47-46. One free throw by Fumai made the score 48-46 and set the stage for the last second theatrics.

Lee scored a game-high 17 points and Fitzgerald added 11 points and five assists. The Eagles struggled from the field, shooting just 32.1 percent. They had trouble dealing with the Cardinals' height and were outscored 38-31. "We didn't shoot the ball well and a lot of it is because of what they do," Wood said. "Our inside game again was atrocious. Our low-post game is nonexistent and you can't expect to beat good teams without a low-post game."

Despite the struggles on the offensive end, Wood was pleased with his team's defensive effort.

"Defensively we were pretty decent," he said. "Anytime you hold a good team to 50 points, you've done the job defensively. Offensively we couldn't execute, we showed our youth, and we showed that we're not very good in the post."

Wood was encouraged that his team was able to keep the game close at the end.

"To play as poorly as we did offensively and have a wide open three essentially at the buzzer to win it, I'm excited about that," he said.

The Eagles (14-6, 6-3 CAC) will travel to Gallaudet University on Saturday, Feb. 5. They will not have another home game until Saturday, Feb. 12 at 2 p.m., when Salisbury comes to Fredericksburg.

CAC Men's Basketball Standings

Team	Wins	Losses
York	7	2
UMW	6	3
Catholic	5	3
Goucher	5	4
St. Mary's	5	4
Salisbury	3	5
Marymount	3	6
Gallaudet	0	7

•••••

The Bulletin needs your help!

•••••

Send us an e-mail if you are interested in becoming our Circulation Director.

bullet@umw.edu

•••••

PRESENTS.

STARVING STUDENT NIGHT

TAKE A STUDY BREAK AND ENJOY

½ Price Pool

Cheap Burgers

30 Cent Wings

Drink Specials

Video Game Tournament

STARTS AT 7:00 PM

EVERY WEDNESDAY NIGHT

Join Us Tuesday, February 8th for our
MARDI GRAS PARTY!

www.umwdining.com

Upcoming Events @ Seacobeck

Black History Month Dinner—Today! Feb. 3

Premium Night—Feb. 10

Valentine's Day Dinner—Feb. 14

Red Hot Chef—Feb. 15

Peanut Butter Feast—Feb. 16

Employment Opportunities

All positions available for evenings and weekends at Seacobeck

Eagle's Nest needs afternoon cashiers and night and weekend

servers, cashiers,

and utility workers.

Eagle's Nest Meal Deals: 2/7–2/13

Lunch Specials: $3.75

Deli: 1/2 sandwich, soup, fountain in drinkMesa Jakes': 2 burritos, piece of whole fruit, fountain drink

Dinner Specials: $4.20

Deli: a 6 in. sub,
fountain in drinkMesa Jakes': taco salad, piece of whole fruit, fountain drinkOriginal Grill: chicken patty sandwich, chips, fountain drinkPete's Arena: slice of pizza, side salad, fountain in drinkOriginal Grill: chicken nuggets, fries, fountain drinkPete's Arena: calzone,
fountain drink

UNIVERSITY OF MARY WASHINGTON

Dining Services

Scion xB By Rudy, Police Photographer

Scion xB
POLICE DEPT.

Scion.com
Out On Bail: 02-01-04

"In my line of work, I always remember the originals" ...Rudy.

Scion xB

Scion xA

 what moves you
scion.com

Locate your nearest

Scion dealer at

scion.com or

call 866-70-SCION.

xB pricing starts at $14,165* well equipped, including A/C, Pioneer AM/FM/CD system, power windows, door locks, mirrors, chrome exhaust tip, anti-lock brakes and vehicle stability control, and choice of 3 wheel cover options. Vehicle price as shown is $16,040. *MSRP includes delivery, processing, and handling fee. Excludes taxes, title, license, and optional equipment. Actual dealer price may vary. TRD USA, Inc. (Toyota Racing Development), an aftermarket performance parts company, markets a line of parts through some Scion dealers. These aftermarket parts are not Genuine Scion parts, and cannot be utilized for Scion warranty replacement. TRD parts are warranted by TRD, not Scion. Note that certain aftermarket equipment may not be street legal in all states and may impact your vehicle's performance or safety. © 2004. Scion and the Scion logo are trademarks of Toyota Motor Corporation and Toyota is a registered trademark of Toyota Motor Corporation. For more information, call 866-70-SCION (866-707-2466) or visit scion.com.

Rugby Aims For Santa Cruz

Women Hope To Win Division II National Championship

By ALICIA SOVART
Special To The Bulletin

On Monday, Jan. 10, most University of Mary Washington students were waiting in lines to buy books or staring at their computers trying to add that one important class. Not all UMW students had their minds solely on academics, however. That day, the Mary Washington women's rugby team was out on the pitch starting their spring conditioning in hopes of reaching the Division II nationals in Santa Cruz, Ca.

This Saturday at noon, the women's team will be kicking off their spring season with a double-header against Longwood University and Elon University of North Carolina.

Despite cold weather and snow, the women's team has not canceled a single practice since the beginning of spring semester.

"We show up in 20 degrees," said club president Catherine Easterling. "We have been at the pitch for the last three weeks, running in the snow and slush and we run on the shell track when the pitch is too messy."

Vice president and Virginia Rugby Union (VRU) All-Star Andrea Wyatt added, "I think our greatest asset is our determination this year, and the fact that we still know how to have fun together. The mix between being serious and having fun makes us unique and successful."

Last year, the girls traveled to the flat, windy plains of Bowling Green, Ohio to compete for the National Championship. Coming into the Elite 8 seeded third, the club felt they had a good chance to make it to the finals at Stanford University. However, after beating the University of Central Florida 12-0, they faced number seven Providence College and lost 25-0.

A third place finish in nationals would not have been so disappointing had Temple University not beaten Providence 17-7 in the finals. Temple is UMW's rival in the Mid-Atlantic Rugby Union (MARFU). Last year, UMW beat Temple 7-5 at Severn River, Md. in the rain and mud to get the number one MARFU seed.

"I think our advantage right now is the memory that so many people took home last year from the playoffs," said 14-year volunteer coach Kris Kabza. "To beat Temple, to play so well in nationals, and to find out that Temple won the national championship, I think that memory alone will be the drive for this semester."

In response to last spring season, the team is taking advantage of their momentum and putting in a lot of training time.

"We have been spending more time this season on fitness, endurance, and speed, which is a change from all other years," said senior VRU All-Star Katie Miller. "I think it will help us be better prepared for our games mentally, and will definitely work towards our advantage during our matches."

Not only have the girls begun practice early, but they also have scheduled a challenging set of matches for the weeks leading up to the MARFU tournament.

Courtesy Erin Ridout

Sophomore Katie Wilson carries the ball up the field while several University of Richmond players close in on the tackle.

"I am looking forward to the number of matches we are going to have," Kabza said. "I think it will develop the team at all levels."

Easterling agrees.

"It is going to be a long semester," she said. "We have an intense schedule. We will be up against Division I teams, and we will be playing in several tournaments. I think this is what we need."

The team knows there is a tough road ahead of them, but they are obviously willing to put forth the effort to achieve their goals. While their ultimate goal is to make it once again to the Elite 8 at nationals, many are concentrating on the immediate future.

Match-secretary and VRU All-Star Erin Ridout said, "I am trying to focus on [The College of New Jersey] first, and I am hoping the

way it will work out is that we will play Temple for first and second of MARFU."

UMW will be hosting TCNJ in the quarterfinals of the MARFU tournament on Mar. 26. The outcome of that match will determine if UMW has a rematch against Temple. Regardless of placement, UMW will go on to the Elite 8 if they make it to the MARFU finals.

Although it would be nice just to make it to California, Wyatt "will not be satisfied until we beat [Temple] in nationals."

When asked about the possible rematch against Temple, Miller said, "If they beat us fairly, I won't be disappointed. If they beat us, then they obviously are a good team because, let's face it, we're good and it takes a lot to beat Mary Wash!"

THE BUSCH REPORT: The Orioles Will Never Learn

Dave Buschenfeldt

I think I'll take a week off from talking about the Patriots. There will be plenty of time for that after the Super Bowl this Sunday. But I will say that Freddie Mitchell's comments about Rodney Harrison and the New England secondary probably weren't the smartest things to say. When you only caught 22 passes during the regular season, you don't have any business talking about a man who has been a premiere safety in the NFL for 11 seasons.

Now here are some random thoughts for the week:

► The Baltimore Orioles just never learn. Why do they think bringing in power hitters will make them a championship contender? If the Red Sox of the past two seasons have taught us anything, it's that pitching wins championships. The 2003 Red Sox had one of the best offenses in baseball history and they still lost to the Yankees in the ALCS. They brought in veteran right-handed Curt Schilling in the offseason and he helped them win their first World Series championship in 86 years. Sammy Sosa might hit a few home runs and put a few more fans in the seats, but it is very unlikely that his presence in the lineup will bring the Orioles any closer to the Yankees and Red Sox in the AL East standings.

► Kudos to Illinois and Boston College, the two remaining undefeated teams in Division I men's college basketball. Illinois dominated Michigan State on Tuesday night to improve to 22-0, and now it looks like they might finish the regular season without a loss. Boston College has set a school record by starting the year 19-0. They are definitely the surprise team of the season. If anyone says they thought that BC would be undefeated in February, they are lying.

► If Emmitt Smith does indeed retire this week, it will be the end of an amazing NFL career. Football fans have been privileged to watch one of the greatest running backs of all time over the last 15 seasons. Smith holds the record for career rushes (4,409), career rushing yards (18,355), career rushing touchdowns (164), and career 100-yard rushing games (78). It's nice that he is going out on his own terms after two seasons with Arizona instead of being forced out by the Cowboys.

► Who would want to take the Los Angeles Lakers coaching job right now? After Rudy Tomjanovich resigned halfway through the season on Wednesday, LA is without a coach for the second time in seven months. There is talk of Phil Jackson returning to take over the team, but why he would want to come back after Kobe Bryant ran both him and Shaquille O'Neal out of town at the end of last season is beyond me.

► Thank you to whoever decided to have Paul McCartney perform at halftime of the Super Bowl. He will be much better than Janet Jackson.

Eagles Swim To Victory

By STEPHANIE POTTER
Staff Writer

The University of Mary Washington women's swim team dominated opponents Marymount and Randolph-Macon this weekend, winning the meets 124-66 and 116-80, respectively. The men's team also came out victorious on Friday against Marymount, winning their meet by a score of 109-74. The men only participated in time trials during the Randolph-Macon meet, however.

"I think we're swimming very well this season, I'm very proud of the team," coach Matt Kinney said. "We have a lot of very good swimmers this year. It's tough to name just one."

The women won every race in Friday's meet, with eight different swimmers coming in first place. Amy Carlson won the 100 butterfly with a time of 2:03.44, Brittany Valint won the 100 freestyle with a time of 55.44, and Susie Duke won the 100 backstroke in 1:02.22. Kathryn Anderson won the 1000 freestyle with a time of 11:05.78 and Patricia Dilger was victorious in both the 200 individual medley (2:15.00) and the 100 breaststroke (1:09.86). The Eagles also won the 200 medley relay (1:52.75) and the 200 freestyle medley (1:40.22).

As for the men, winners in Friday's Marymount meet include Brian Craddock in the 1000 (10:21.88), James Thomas in the 50 freestyle (22.28), Kevin Douglas in the 100 backstroke (57.02), and team wins in the 200 medley relay (1:40.94) and the 200 free relay (1:29.71).

In Saturday's meet, seven women helped drive the team to victory, including Abby Koch in the 1000 freestyle with a time of 11:08.16, Ally Kight in the 200 freestyle with a time of 2:02.59, and Amy Carlson in the 50 freestyle with a time of 25.63. Lorena de la Garza won the 200 fly (2:09.46), Maureen Greenlee won the 100 freestyle (54.45), and Patricia Dilger won the 200 breaststroke (2:29.41). The team also won both relays.

Sophomore Maureen Greenlee turned in outstanding performances in both meets, earning an NCAA provisional cut and breaking her own Capital Athletic Conference record with a time of 24.31 in the 50 freestyle on Friday.

"[It is] fabulous," Greenlee said of her record-breaking performance. "Best times in the 50 freestyle don't come often. Everything has to go perfectly in your race."

The women's team will be training hard for the CAC Championships, which will be held at UMW on Friday, Feb. 18. Greenlee is optimistic about the team's chances.

"We've trained so well this year, and the sprint events should be really fast," she said. "We have so many talented freshmen freestylers."

Sophomore Amy Carlson and senior Kevin Douglas agree, calling the team "very strong in the water" and attributing their success to hard work and dedication.

"Winning heats is nice, but I'm more interested in improving times," said Carlson, who earned first place in both meets. "Everyone will be going much faster at conferences."

The Eagles' last regular season meet will be Saturday, Feb. 5, against Goucher College at 1 p.m. in Goolrick natatorium.

Men Lack Inside Presence

◀ BBALL, page 12

stroked a 3-pointer to give the Eagles their first lead of the game at 40-39 with 7:41 to play.

Catholic built their lead back to five before a 3-pointer from Galinat made the score 45-43. Catholic answered with a layup, but Fitzgerald came down and stuck another three to pull the Eagles to within one at 47-46. One free throw by Fumai made the score 48-46 and set the stage for the last second theatrics.

Lee scored a game-high 17 points and Fitzgerald added 11 points and five assists. The Eagles struggled from the field, shooting just 32.1 percent. They had trouble dealing with the Cardinals' height and were outbounded 38-31. "We didn't shoot the ball well and a lot of it is because of what they do," Wood said. "Our inside game again was atrocious. Our low-post game is nonexistent and you can't expect to beat good teams without a low-post game."

Despite the struggles on the offensive end, Wood was pleased with his team's defensive effort.

"Defensively we were pretty decent," he said. "Anytime you hold a good team to 50 points, you've done the job defensively. Offensively we couldn't execute, we showed our youth, and we showed that we're not very good in the post."

Wood was encouraged that his team was able to keep the game close at the end.

"To play as poorly as we did offensively and have a wide open three essentially at the buzzer to win it, I'm excited about that," he said.

The Eagles (14-6, 6-3 CAC) will travel to Gallaudet University on Saturday, Feb. 5. They will not have another home game until Saturday, Feb. 12 at 2 p.m., when Salisbury comes to Fredericksburg.

CAC Men's Basketball Standings

Team	Wins	Losses
York	7	2
UMW	6	3
Catholic	5	3
Goucher	5	4
St. Mary's	5	4
Salisbury	3	5
Marymount	3	6
Gallaudet	0	7

The Bulletin needs your help!

Send us an e-mail if you are interested in becoming our Circulation Director.

bullet@umw.edu

Sports

Peter Kelley/Bullet

Sophomore Mike Lee plays tough defense on Catholic sophomore guard Mike Wasilenko in the second half of the Eagles' heartbreaking 50-46 loss last night.

Men Lose To Catholic

By DAVE BUSCHENFELDT
Sports Editor

With 10 seconds to play in the game, the University of Mary Washington men's basketball team trailed Catholic 48-46. Head coach Rod Wood yelled to his team, "One shot!" He then pointed to sophomore Mike Lee and said, "You got it." Lee dove into the lane and passed to freshman Jon Pierce in the right corner. Pierce's 3-point attempt bounced off the rim and Catholic grabbed the rebound and called a timeout.

Sophomore Scott Fumai went on to hit two free throws to secure a 50-46 win for the visiting Cardinals.

"I was getting ready to call a timeout, and to be perfectly honest with you, I think that we're better talent-wise than [Catholic]," Wood said. "We had the best player on the court with the ball in his hands. That's what it comes down to. At that time, coaching is all over. You're the best player, go. And what did we get? A wide open three to win it. I couldn't have drew up a better play."

The atmosphere inside of Goolrick Gymnasium was electric to begin the game and the stands were overflowing with cheering Eagle fans. Catholic quickly quieted the raucous crowd by going on a 13-0 run over the first four and a half minutes.

"[We were] nervous and jacked up too high," Wood said, "I was afraid of that."

The Eagles finally were able to get on the board when sophomore A.J. Fitzgerald nailed a 3-pointer from the top of the key at 15:21. On the next defensive possession, Fitzgerald made a steal and fed Lee, who drained a 3-pointer of his own, and the Eagles were rolling.

Back-to-back layups by Lee cut the Catholic lead to 15-10 with 13 minutes left in the half, but the Cardinals quickly pushed their lead back to nine. A 3-pointer by freshman Justin Baker brought the Eagles to within two with three minutes to play, and after a Catholic layup, Lee nailed another 3-pointer to make the score 25-24 less than a minute before halftime. The Eagles went into the locker room trailing 27-24.

At halftime, the doubles tennis tandem of Paul Bristow and Dan Uyar was honored on the court as they received their rings for winning the National Championship last spring.

The Eagles came out slow again to begin the second half, and had fallen behind 36-26 four minutes in. Back-to-back 3-pointers by Fitzgerald and freshman Kevin Galinat, and a driving layup by Lee over the outstretched arms of the Catholic big men had the Eagles right back to within two less than four minutes later.

The Eagles began to pick up the intensity as Lee dove on the floor after a loose ball and sophomore Josh Wilson hustled to save the ball from going out of bounds. Fitzgerald carried the ball down the court and found Lee who

► See BBALL, page 11

Eagles Fall To Cardinals

By LAUREN BOSTON
Staff Writer

All good things must come to an end, as the University of Mary Washington women's basketball team discovered last night. After successfully defending their home court for eight games, the Eagles lost for the first time at Goolrick Gymnasium this season to visiting Catholic University.

Despite several attempts to claw their way back into the game, the Eagles were unable to complete a comeback and fell to the Cardinals 60-51.

"We got down early, but I think we fought the whole game and never gave up," said junior Lindsey Forbush.

At the start of the game, the Eagles stayed with Catholic, and 15 minutes into the first half UMW was up 9-8. That was their last lead of the game, however.

Catholic controlled the tempo of the game from start to finish, making shots and collapsing on defense. This prevented the Eagles from penetrating into the paint for any decent looks at the hoop. UMW could not get a shot to drop, and attempt after attempt rimmed out. The Eagles made many errant passes and rushed their shots in the first half, while the Cardinals passed with ease and created open shots along the perimeter.

The Cardinals capitalized on UMW turnovers and missed shots. They had their largest lead of the game with three minutes left in the first half at 36-16. Catholic finished the first half strong and denied the Eagles any chance at making a comeback.

After going into halftime down 41-24, the Eagles came out in the second half playing with far more control and hustle. Several open looks got the Eagles and their fans back into the game. With 13 minutes left, the Eagles had cut their deficit to 10 at 45-35.

UMW was all over the court, diving for loose balls and fighting for offensive rebounds. But for all the rebounds and fast breaks, the Eagles still could not get the job done on offense, with several shots not even hitting the rim. The Eagles shot just 22.2 percent from the field in the second half.

With six minutes left in the game, it appeared as if the Eagles were back in it. Sophomore Debbie Bruen was fouled and hit her first free throw. She missed her second attempt, but the Eagles snatched the offensive rebound and kicked the ball out to junior Jenn Olinger who nailed a 3-pointer to make the score 52-46.

The Cardinals continued to play solid defense and the Eagles continued to struggle putting the ball in the hoop. The Eagles have now lost two consecutive Capital Athletic Conference games.

"We didn't play the best game of the season," Bruen said bluntly. "Our shots weren't falling and it was just an off game."

Freshman Amanda Bates led the Eagles with 14 points, four assists and four steals. Forbush scored 14 points as well and Olinger added eight.

The Eagles (14-5, 7-2 CAC) will face Gallaudet University Saturday at 2 p.m. Bruen is confident things will turn around for the team.

"We're ready to win the next one," she said.

Peter Kelley/Bullet

Coach Deena Applebury huddles with her team.

Upcoming Events

Feb. 5 - Swimming vs. Goucher, 1 p.m.

Feb. 7 - Women's Basketball vs. Christendom College, 7 p.m.

Athlete of the Week

Sophomore Maureen Greenlee broke her own CAC record in the 50 yard freestyle with a time of 24.31

Sports

Peter Kelley/Bullet

Sophomore Mike Lee plays tough defense on Catholic sophomore guard Mike Wasilenko in the second half of the Eagles' heartbreaking 50-46 loss last night.

Men Lose To Catholic

By DAVE BUSCHENFELDT
Sports Editor

With 10 seconds to play in the game, the University of Mary Washington men's basketball team trailed Catholic 48-46. Head coach Rod Wood yelled to his team, "One shot!" He then pointed to sophomore Mike Lee and said, "You got it." Lee drove into the lane and passed to freshman Jon Pierce in the right corner. Pierce's 3-point attempt bounced off the rim and Catholic grabbed the rebound and called a timeout.

Sophomore Scott Fumai went on to hit two free throws to secure a 50-46 win for the visiting Cardinals.

"I was getting ready to call a timeout, and to be perfectly honest with you, I think that we're better talent-wise than [Catholic]," Wood said. "We had the best player on the court with the ball in his hands. That's what it comes down to. At that time, coaching is all over. You're the best player, go. And what did we get? A wide open three to win it. I couldn't have drew up a better play."

The atmosphere inside of Goodrick Gymnasium was electric to begin the game and the stands were overflowing with cheering Eagle fans. Catholic quickly quieted the raucous crowd by going on a 13-0 run over the first four and a half minutes.

"[We were] nervous and jacked up too high," Wood said. "I was afraid of that."

The Eagles finally were able to get on the board when sophomore A.J. Fitzgerald nailed a 3-pointer from the top of the key at 15:21. On the next defensive possession, Fitzgerald made a steal and fed Lee, who drained a 3-pointer of his own, and the Eagles were rolling.

Back-to-back layups by Lee cut the Catholic lead to 15-10 with 13 minutes left in the half, but the Cardinals quickly pushed their lead back to nine. A 3-pointer by freshman Justin Baker brought the Eagles to within two with three minutes to play, and after a Catholic layup, Lee nailed another 3-pointer to make the score 25-24 less than a minute before halftime. The Eagles went into the locker room trailing 27-24.

At halftime, the doubles tennis tandem of Paul Bristow and Dan Uyar was honored on the court as they received their rings for winning the National Championship last spring.

The Eagles came out slow again to begin the second half, and had fallen behind 36-26 four minutes in. Back-to-back 3-pointers by Fitzgerald and freshman Kevin Galinat, and a driving layup by Lee over the outstretched arms of the Catholic big men had the Eagles right back to within two less than four minutes later.

The Eagles began to pick up the intensity as Lee dove on the floor after a loose ball and sophomore Josh Wilson hustled to save the ball from going out of bounds. Fitzgerald carried the ball down the court and found Lee who

► See BBALL, page 11

Eagles Fall To Cardinals

By LAUREN BOSTON
Staff Writer

All good things must come to an end, as the University of Mary Washington women's basketball team discovered last night. After successfully defending their home court for eight games, the Eagles lost for the first time at Goodrick Gymnasium this season to visiting Catholic University.

Despite several attempts to claw their way back into the game, the Eagles were unable to complete a comeback and fell to the Cardinals 60-51.

"We got down early, but I think we fought the whole game and never gave up," said junior Lindsey Forbush.

At the start of the game, the Eagles stayed with Catholic, and 15 minutes into the first half UMW was up 9-8. That was their last lead of the game, however.

Catholic controlled the tempo of the game from start to finish, making shots and collapsing on defense. This prevented the Eagles from penetrating into the paint for any decent looks at the hoop. UMW could not get a shot to drop, and attempt after attempt rimmed out. The Eagles made many errant passes and rushed their shots in the first half, while the Cardinals passed with ease and created open shots along the perimeter.

The Cardinals capitalized on UMW turnovers and missed shots. They had their largest lead of the game with three minutes left in the first half at 36-16. Catholic finished the first half strong and denied the Eagles any chance at making a comeback.

After going into halftime down 41-24, the Eagles came out in the second half playing with far more control and hustle. Several open looks got the Eagles and their fans back into the game. With 13 minutes left, the Eagles had cut their deficit to 10 at 45:35.

UMW was all over the court, diving for loose balls and fighting for offensive rebounds. But for all the rebounds and fast breaks, the Eagles still could not get the job done on offense, with several shots not even hitting the rim. The Eagles shot just 22.2 percent from the field in the second half.

With six minutes left in the game, it appeared as if the Eagles were back in it. Sophomore Debbie Bruen was fouled and hit her first free throw. She missed her second attempt, but the Eagles snatched the offensive rebound and kicked the ball out to junior Jenn Olinger who nailed a 3-pointer to make the score 52-46.

The Cardinals continued to play solid defense and the Eagles continued to struggle putting the ball in the hoop. The Eagles have now lost two consecutive Capital Athletic Conference games.

"We didn't play the best game of the season," Bruen said bluntly. "Our shots weren't falling and it was just an off game."

Freshman Amanda Bates led the Eagles with 14 points, four assists and four steals. Forbush scored 14 points as well and Olinger added eight.

The Eagles (14-5, 7-2 CAC) will face Gallaudet University Saturday at 2 p.m. Bruen is confident things will turn around for the team.

"We're ready to win the next one," she said.

Peter Kelley/Bullet

Coach Deena Applebury huddles with her team.

Upcoming Events

Feb. 5 - Swimming vs. Goucher, 1 p.m.

Feb. 7 - Women's Basketball vs. Christendom College, 7 p.m.

Athlete of the Week

Sophomore Maureen Greenlee broke her own CAC record in the 50 yard freestyle with a time of 24.31